

Brahma-Vāda

Doctrine of Śrī Vallabhācārya

G. V. Tagare

Biblioteka Inst. Filozofii

1826015802

D.K. Printworld (P) Ltd.

NEW DELHI-110015

Cataloging in Publication Data — DK

Tagare, G.V. (Ganesh Vasudeo), 1911-

Brahma-vāda.

[Contemporary researches in Hindu philosophy & religion; no. 9].

Includes bibliographical references (p. ).

Includes index.

1. Vallabhācārya, 1479-1531? — Teachings. 2. Vedānta.
3. Philosophy, Hindu. I. Title. II. Series: Contemporary researches in Hindu philosophy & religion; no. 9.

ISBN 81-246-0112-7

First Published in India in 1998

© Author

Published in India by:

D.K. Printworld (P) Ltd.

Regd. office : 'Sri Kunj' F-52, Bali Nagar

New Delhi - 110 015

Phones : (011) 545-3975, 546-6019; Fax : (011) 546-5926

E-mail: dkprint@4mis.com

Foreword

FOR Mahāprabhu Sri Vallabhācārya, devotion for God, is neither merely a divine relishment of the Godhood of Śrī Kṛṣṇa nor is it merely a realisation of powers and attributes of all pervasive formless Akṣara-brahman. Kṛṣṇa, according to Mahāprabhu is both a Divine Person as well as an Omniscient, Omnipresent, Omniscient and Omnipotent Power. Therefore, an ideal devotee has to relish Brahman as Kṛṣṇa and realise Kṛṣṇa as Brahman.<sup>1</sup>

Mahāprabhu says, "This world is to be realised as a part and form of God but it should not be relished as God."<sup>2</sup>

We, certainly cannot relish any single musical note as a song but any two musical notes of mutually contradictory sounds can indeed come into a charming harmony in any sweet song.

For Mahāprabhu, Kṛṣṇa is both Transcendental and Immanent reality. He is the Supreme Being, Conciousness and Bliss. He is all-pervasive, therefore system of Śuddhādvaita Vedānta is also a pursuit of understanding how His all-pervasive unity encompasses all the possible phenomenon proposed by the different systems of thought. They are supposed as either power or form, identical with the essence of Supreme Being.<sup>3</sup>

1. महात्म्यज्ञानपूर्वस्तु सुदृढः सर्वतोऽधिकः स्नेहो भक्तिरिति प्रोक्तस्तया भुक्तिर्नचान्यथा (तत्त्वार्थदीपनिबन्धः १।४६).
2. ब्रह्मरूपं जगद् ज्ञातव्यं (ब्रह्म) जगतो व्यतिरिच्यते इति तत्र आसक्तिः कर्तव्य (सुयोधिनीः २।१।३५).
3. परं ब्रह्म तु कृष्णो हि सच्चिदानन्दकं बृहत्। द्विरूपं तद्विद्वि सर्वं स्यादेकं तस्माद्विलक्षणम्। अपरं तत्र पूर्वस्मिन् वादिनो बहुधा जगुः मायिकं सगुणं कार्यं स्वतन्त्रञ्चेति नैकधा। तदेवैतत्प्रकारेण भवतीति श्रुतेमत् (सिद्धान्तमुक्तावलीः ३-४)

Yes The God is all-pervasive, therefore, in every vision of divinity some divine perspective is present.<sup>4</sup>

The distinction must be made clear between what 'The thing as it is' is and what 'The human logic demands the thing to be' is. The Laws of thoughts are prime necessity for any intellectual thinking; but can our intellect be regarded as the sole criterion of objective reality? We certainly cannot intellectually grasp how something being wave can also be particles. We have simply to observe or presume how the light behaves surrationally. Mahāprabhu Vallabhācārya consider Brahman also a Suprarational phenomenon, i.e., neither rational nor irrational one.

Mahāprabhu emphatically clarifies the Brahman is all and all, therefore it is full of mutually contradictory attributes. Such contradictory attributes cannot be regarded as irrational concepts nor there is any need to put blind faith in our capacity of reasoning. Because Brahman is Suprarational Phenomenon therefore different philosophical approaches can be regarded as describing some partial truth of Brahman. At the same time no philosophy can be a total description of the totality of the truth: एकैको वादो ब्रह्मण एकैकधर्मप्रतिपादकैकवाक्यशेषः इति भगवान् तान् सबन्धिव अनुसरति.<sup>5</sup>

I am glad the renowned scholar of Purāṇasāstra and Indology Sri G.V. Tagare's writing on Mahāprabhu Śrī Vallabhācārya is being published. It will certainly help all the readers interested in history, religion and philosophy of medieval India.

63, Swastik Society,
4th Road, Juhu Scheme,
Vile Parle (W),
Mumbai 400 056

Goswamy Shyam Manohar

-
4. नानावादानुरोधाय इति सिद्धान्ततदाभासतत्पाषण्डरूपाः नानावादाः, तेषाम् अनुरोधो यस्य, सर्वैरेव यथा निरूप्यते तथा भगवान् भवतीति (सुबोधिनी: १०।१३।४३).
  5. तत्त्वार्थदीपनिबन्धः १।७०.

Preface

THIS is an attempt to understand and study the Brahma Vāda doctrine of the revolutionary thinker Vallabhācārya (1478?-1530 AD), the founder of the Śuddhādvaita school of philosophy. As philosophical doctrines evolve out of profound, intricately meta-physical discussions for a pretty long period, it is interesting to trace the evolution of Vallabhācārya's philosophy.

It is well-known how man in the Ṛgvedic period was fascinated and mystified at the grand design of Nature, that he wondered if there could be some designer in high heavens (paramē vyoman as stated in the Nāsadīya Sūkta, Ṛgveda, X. 187.7). After speculations and discussions, he came to believe that there must be some Ultimate Reality (which they designated as Brahman) as the Cause (or Maker) of the universe. This belief led to a prolonged dialogue of relation between Brahman, man and the world and various views came to be recorded in the Upaniṣads. The dialogue continued unabated in the post-Upaniṣadic period despite the attempts of the Brahma Sūtra to synthesize and systematize the divergent views in Upaniṣads.

The discussions in the post-Brahma Sūtra period crystalized in three main thought currents about this relationship:

- (i) The Brahman, Man and the World are intrinsically one and the same (Advaita).
- (ii) The Brahman, Man and the World are essentially different inter se (Dvaita) and
- (iii) a sort of a compromise, it regards cit (sentients) and acit (non-sentients) are different but any how they form parts of God's (Brahman's) person (Viśiṣṭādvaita)

Great teachers holding different views about this relation appeared before Vallabhācārya. To mention a few prominent ones: Śaṅkara (Kevalādvaita), Bhāskara (Bhedābheda), Rāmānuja (Viśiṣṭādvaita), Madhva (Dvaita), Śrīpati Paṇḍit (Dvaitādvaita or Śakti-Viśiṣṭādvaita).

Against this background, Vallabhācārya's special contribution to philosophic thought is worth considering. Vallabha is a staunch Vaiṣṇava Advaitin. The Brahman or Kṛṣṇa is one without a second. By His sheer will-power He creates, sustains and withdraws within Himself the world. The world is not destroyed. He does not want any upādāna (material or instrument) or māyā for creation etc. of the world. Hence, the terms suddhādvaita; 'Advaita not soiled with māyā.' Kṛṣṇa transforms Himself into the sentient and insentient world (fundamentals of BrahmaVāda) and as such the world is real. This transformation effects no change in Him (avikṛta pariṇāma vāda): Kṛṣṇa is impartial in dispensing the fruits of karmas to individuals. Vallabha rejects the adrṣṭa theory.

Vallabha was an exponent of a special type of Bhakti called Puṣṭi Bhakti. For Puṣṭi Bhaktas Kṛṣṇa is partial (principal of Election) and He gives them a special body in mokṣa. None can attain to mokṣa without Lord's grace (anugraha).

As will be seen in this book, Vallabha's doctrine about Kṛṣṇa and His powers etc. has a close similarity with many tenets of Kāśmīr Śaivism.

But Vallabha's special doctrine of Akṣara Brahman needs deeper consideration as historians of Indian philosophy have simply ignored it.

Vallabhācārya's teaching has special relevance to modern tension-ridden world. Vallabha's theory about the reality of the world as against Śaṅkara's theory of world as an illusion, his emphasis on implicit faith in God and his doctrine of Bhakti-Karma-Samuccaya will certainly offer solace and guidance to persons of all sects and communities.

Lastly I sincerely and gratefully thank the eminent Vallabhite scholar (and a descendant of Mahāprabhu Vallabhācārya) Goswami

Preface

ix

Shyam Manoharlalji for kindly helping me with necessary references and for scanning every line of this book.

I am very much thankful to Shri Susheel K. Mittal, the Director of D.K. Printworld (P) Ltd. and his staff for producing this beautiful book with such promptness.

06.06.98

G. V. Tagare

Contents

Foreword	v
Preface	vii
Abbreviations	xiii
Introduction	1
1. Vallabhācārya: A Life-Sketch	5
2. Evolution of Indian Philosophical Thought	13
3. Pre-Brahma Sūtra Teachers	25
4. Pre-Vallabha Vedānta Thought	41
5. The Concept of the Deity	55
6. The Concept of Akṣara Brahman	67
7. The Individual Soul (jīvātman)	73
8. The Jagat (world)	85
9. Epilogue	91
Appendices
I — Puṣṭi Bhakti	95
II — Verses attributed to Viṣṇusvāmin	99
Bibliography	103
Glossary of Sanskrit Terms	105
Subject Index	111
General Index	115

Abbreviations

AB	—	Aṅu Bhāṣya of Vallabhācārya
BG	—	The Bhagavad Gītā
BhP	—	The Bhāgavata Purāṇa
BrSū	—	The Brahma Sūtra
TDN	—	Tattvārtha-dīpa-nibandha.

Introduction

It was one of the darkest periods in the history of India. The Golden Age — the result of the great contributions of ancient sages, kings and agro-mercantile communities passed into hoary antiquities. The memory of that period led to lethargy, a sort of mental stupor. Indians forgot that the traditional memory about mountains Meru, Nīla, Śveta is not mythology but a reality. Thus, mountain Meru is the Pāmīr mount. Nīla is a chain of Zerafshan, Trans Alai, Tien-shan range and mount Śveta is the mountain range of Nura-Turkistan-Akshai Iraq hills. They had a hazy idea about the locations of the countries like Supārśva (Kirghizia), Uttar Kuru (Western Siberia), Bhadra Varṣa (N. China) and the like.<sup>1</sup> In their self-complacency and total indifference to their rich heritage, they became so short-sighted that in their Purāṇas — especially in the Tīrtha Yātrā sections, they claimed that all great mythological events and all Tīrthas (sacred places) in the world concentrated in their particular place. One wonders why the last redactor of the Skanda Purāṇa did not suspect the veracity of the accounts given in the Revā Khaṇḍa, Nāgara Khaṇḍa and Prabhāsa Khaṇḍa each claiming, Broach, Vaḍnagar and Prabhāsa (Sorati Somanath) as the stage of all the mythological events.

This ostrich-like self-complacency led the Indians of the post-fifth century AD period, to ignore completely the social and religious revolution and military progress in the neighbouring countries in Central and West Asia. The progressive research in material (and positive) sciences recorded by Varāha-Mihira in the Bṛhat-Saṃhitā (AD 505) was neglected in the mistaken glorification of and loss of the sense of proportion regarding the so-called spiritual or other-worldly lores. Even the 'left-handed' obnoxious Tāntric practices of Buddhists, Śaivas or Śāktas fascinated the public mind. People believed in the self-professed supernatural powers of siddhas. These masters of divine supernatural powers could not face the military powers of Turkish Buddhists who were converted to Islam, before they invaded India.

Indians of the tenth century AD did not learn anything from the conquest of the Hindu Kingdom of Dahir in the seventh century, in Sindh. They were not noted for the social we-feeling or political foresight or sense of patriotism. When the Turks battered the gates of Kabul, no king from Delhi or Punjab went to the Hindu, Shāhi Kings of Afghanistan. Ultimately, Shāhi kings capitulated and the Khyber Pass became the gateway of India and Hindu principalities collapsed like a bungalow of cards before the Muslims invaders.

Condition of Hindus under Islam

From the records of Muslim chroniclers, of foreign travellers and references in Indian literature of that period, the condition of Hindus under Muslim rulers was unenviable. Pogroms and other barbarities—almost incredible cruelties, were perpetrated on Hindus.

The following brief summary of the description of the condition of Hindus under the Muslims, given by the eminent historian Jadu Nath Sarkar<sup>2</sup> will clearly and graphically show the enormity of the sufferings to which Hinduss were subjected.

States Jadu Nath Sarkar:

By the basic concept of Islam, all non-Muslims are its enemies. The ideal aim was to exterminate them totally—the poll tax, Jizya, was payable by Hindus for permission to live in their own ancestral homes under Muslim sovereigns. In addition to the payment of Jizya, the Hindus were subjected to many disabilities in the practice of their religious and other civil rights.

Gone were the great dharma-sāstrakāras, the real leaders of sociological and sympathetic human outlook who absorbed the invading Greeks, Śakas (Scythians) and Hūṇas (Mongolians) in the Hindu or Vedic society preserving their identity in the common fold of Hindu (Vedi-) society. But their bigoted descendants could never understand that only when the dharma is humane, man can observe dharma and not vice-versa. Granting that smṛti texts were intuitive insightful memories of Vedic ṛṣis of different periods, socio-political changes which inevitably take place in the course of time, demand that suitable amendments and changes in laws or religious practices must be made for the preservation of society. But the nibandhakāras of this period, the so-called custodians of dharma-sāstra, looked upon Smṛtis like unchanging stone-inscriptions. For example, ancient dharma-sāstra-kāras believed in the natural impollutibility of women.<sup>3</sup> Tantra works go a step further to glorify women. Thus Śakti-Saṅgama Tantra, Tārā Khaṇḍa 23.10 states: "Women are goddesses, they are (as good as) vital airs; they are the ornament of the house. One should not make them infuriated nor pass derogatory remarks about them." But these nibandhakāras assumed 'I-am-holier-than-thou' attitude and excommunicated the unfortunate men and women who suffered during foreign invasions and occupation.

A still pernicious superstition was held by these 'law-givers' that there were only two varṇas — brāhmaṇa and śūdra, in the Kali age. And Purāṇas like the Skanda declared that śūdras were ineligible to learn even non-religious sciences like grammar, rhetorics, etc. Ignorance bred fragmentation of the society into sub-castes and sub-sub-castes depending on the profession or trade followed by the community and the geographical area colonised or occupied by it at a particular period. Out of self-respect, each group considered itself independent, self-sufficient and 'pollutable' by commensal and connubial relation with any other 'outside' group even though following the same trade or profession.

These ignorant masses or innocents fell easy victim to the politically supported crafty Muslim missionaries who professed pseudo — pro-Hindu Sūfism and converted the masses to Islam. It is said that sūfis converted more Hindus to Islam than the ruthless sultāns with their swords.

It is under such terrible social and political conditions that our saints and philosophers of the medieval period struggled for the solidarity and uplift of our society.

Of these saints and philosophers, Vallabhācārya was one of the prominent ones.

Notes

1. For the identification of Purāṇic places, see S.M. Ali: The Geography of the Purāṇas (Peoples Publishing House, Bombay 1973) Ch. III.
2. Summarised from The Delhi Sultanate, pp. 617-23. In the series History and Culture of Indian People, Vol. VI, Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan, Mumbai Vallabhācārya states in Kṛṣṇāsraya:
 म्लेच्छाक्रान्तेषु देशेषु धार्पकनिलयेषु च ।
 सत्पीडाव्यग्रलोकेषु कृष्ण एव गतिर्मम ॥
3. अनिन्दा योपितः सर्वा नेता दुष्यन्ति कर्हिचित् ।
 मासि मासि रजां ह्यासां दुष्कृतानपकर्षनि ।
 स्कन्द, नागरखण्ड, 144.130
4. स्त्रियो देवाः स्त्रियः प्राणाः, स्त्रिय एव हि भूषणम् ।
 स्त्रीणां निन्दा न कर्तव्या, न चताः क्रोधयेदपि ॥
 शक्तिसङ्गमत्र, ताराखण्ड, 23.10
5. For the nefarious activities of sūfis see,
 (i) Sethu Madhavrao Pagdee — Sūfi Sampradāya
 (ii) N.R. Phatak: Eknath, Vāṅmaya ānī kārya, pp. 6-10.

Vallabhācārya: A Life-Sketch

FOR the proper understanding and appreciation of any great person — be he a poet, an artist or a philosopher — some information about important facts regarding his family background and life helps us to understand the greatness or otherwise of his contribution. They explain why he or she adopted a particular world-view. Hence, the need of the life-sketch of a revolutionary thinker like Vallabhācārya.

Vallabhācārya was a Telugu brāhmaṇa from Andhra Pradesh. The family belonged to the Taittirīya Branch of the Black (Kṛṣṇa) Yajur-veda. The sūtra of his family was Āpastamba and the gotra was Bhāradvāja. His native place was Kankarwad in Telāṅgaṇā. It is reported that five generations preceding Vallabhācārya, performed a total number of one hundred Soma-sacrifices. Hence, they came to be called dīkṣita. Devotion to Kṛṣṇa (with Kṛṣṇa as the family deity) was as if the family legacy of Vallabhācārya.

The names of Vallabhācārya's parents were Lakṣmaṇa Bhaṭṭa and Illamagaru. Like many other scholars all over India, Lakṣmaṇa Bhaṭṭa was gravitated to Vārāṇasī. Being a Vedic scholar and expert in the ritualistic performance of sacrifices, Lakṣmaṇa Bhaṭṭa soon established himself in Vārāṇasī. But those were very precarious days, especially to the inhabitants of sacred places. Vārāṇasī was the special target of Muslim rulers down to the death of Aurangzeb (AD 1707). Rise and spread of Marāṭhā power completely put an end to such troubles.

It was sometime in AD 1478 (1481?) that there was a strong rumour that a Muslim invasion of Vārāṇasī was imminent. Naturally Lakṣmaṇa Bhaṭṭa fled to the south along with his family and friends. Lakṣmaṇa Bhaṭṭa's wife was advanced in pregnancy. The mental tension caused by compulsorily leaving everything at home and flying for life and the physical strain of actually travelling with utmost speed, told upon Illamagaru's health and she delivered on the way a silent child, while their companions were in a hurry to go away as far as possible. Lakṣmaṇa Bhaṭṭa left the child under a tree and with a heavy heart, the couple proceeded to catch up with their fellow travellers.

But imponderable are the ways of the Almighty. After going for a short distance, the motherly instinct of Illamagaru forced her to have a look at her silent-born child. And lo! the child was pulsating with life. Thus, like Gautama Buddha, was born another philosopher under a tree in a forest.

Though there is a difference of opinion about the exact birthdate of Vallabhācārya (Saṃvat 1529 or 1535), the majority believe that Vallabhācārya was born on Sunday, the eleventh lunar day of the dark half of Vaiśākha, Saṃvat 1535. When peace returned after some days, the family came back to Vārāṇasī. When Vallabhācārya was five-years-old, his mauñjī bandhana (Institution of the sacred thread and initiation in to gāyatrī mantram) was performed by his father. For his early education, Vallabhācārya was entrusted with Viṣṇucitta.

As stated above, Vārāṇasī was always under the threat of Muslim invasions. Lakṣmaṇa Bhaṭṭa thought it prudent to return to the south to Vijayanagar where his brother-in-law, wife's brother, was an influential government official as dānādhyakṣa. Vijayanagar was the only Hindu Kingdom which maintained its independence with dignity, despite the invasions of neighbouring Muslim powers. Lakṣmaṇa Bhaṭṭa hoped that he could live there in safety and with dignity and arrange for the advanced education of his son Vallabhācārya. With these fond hopes, the family started on their journey to Vijayanagar. Unfortunately, as Fate would have it, Lakṣmaṇa Bhaṭṭa passed away on the way. Ultimately Vallabhācārya and his mother reached Vijayanagar and stayed with his maternal uncle.

Vijayanagar was a centre of advanced Hindu learning. It was a powerful centre of Mādhva Vaiṣṇavism. Madhva, the great dualistic philosopher, belonged to Karnatak of which Vijayanagar was the capital. Naturally eminent teachers like Mādhavendra Yati, Tirummalaya, under whom Vallabhācārya studied, were Mādhvas. This explains the influence of Madhva on Vallabhācārya whose works Anu Bhāṣya, Bhāgavatārtha Prakaraṇa remind one of similar titles of Madhva's works.

We do not know which works Vallabhācārya studied under these eminent teachers. Nor do we know, when he completed his education. But in AD 1488, he left with his mother for a pilgrimage. After visiting his ancestral native place (Kankarwad), he went to Jagannātha Purī (Orissa) to attend a dharma-sabhā convened there. It seems that even in his early youth, Vallabhācārya attained sufficient mastery in Śāstric learning which enabled him to participate in conferences of scholars. On account of his mastery over dharma śāstra at such a young age, they called him Bāla Sarasvatī. It is possible that due to his participation in the dharma-sabhā, his convictions about Kṛṣṇa-bhakti were confirmed. His articles of faith were very simple:

1. The summum bonum (essence) of all śāstras is the Bhagavad Gītā.
2. The highest divinity is Kṛṣṇa, the son of Devakī.
3. Kṛṣṇa's name(s) is the only sacred most of all the mantras.
4. (The only) karma (or ritualistic work) is the service of that Lord.

Vallabhācārya tells us that it was Lord Jagannātha Himself who wrote down in His own hand, the above orders in a Sanskrit verse.<sup>1</sup> These firm convictions were repeated by Vallabhācārya in his first work Tattivārtha-dīpa-nībandha.<sup>2</sup>

After that dharma-sabhā, Vallabhācārya went to Ujjain in AD 1489, as there was the kumbha parvan on the first day of Caitra at Ujjain. After this visit to Ujjain, he returned to Vijayanagar to resume his studies.

Pilgrimages of Vallabhācārya

This is an important period in Vallabhācārya's life and career. He started from Vijayanagar in AD 1491 (Samvat 1548, 2nd lunar day in the dark half of Vaiśākha). With Ṭhākurji (Lord Kṛṣṇa's idol) and his works the Bhagavad Gītā and the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, he went first to Paṇḍharpur (District Solapur, Maharashtra) — a place sacred to all Vaiṣṇava sects including that of Mahāprabhu Gaurāṅga (Caitanya). Though there is no maṭha of that sect at present at Paṇḍharpur, Caitanya's brother spent his life-time here and Gaurāṅga Prabhu stayed here with him for some days.

In this itinerary of six long years, Vallabhācārya propagated his doctrines in the Purāṇa Pravacanas (expositions) and learned discussions, conferences and wrote his philosophical treatises such as commentaries on Jaimini's Pūrva Mīmāṃsā and Bādarāyaṇa's Uttara Mīmāṃsā and some part of Subodhini (commentary on the Bhāgavata Purāṇa). Inspired with a divine mission, Vallabhācārya influenced people wherever he went and got a number of celebrities of his time as his followers. There is no unanimous opinion about places visited by Vallabhācārya, though a list mentions Kolhāpur, Paṇḍharpur and Nāsik in Maharashtra, Mathurā, Haridvār, Kāśī and Kedār in U.P., and Gayā in Bihar. Though there is no unanimity in the lists of Vallabhācārya's baiṭhaks (places resorted to for some days), the very fact that Vallabhācārya made an intensive tour all over north India, seems clear. Vallabhācārya returned to Vijayanagar in AD 1497 (Samvat 1554, 3rd lunar day in the bright half of Vaiśākha). It was during this tour that he propagated his formulation of the Brahma-Vāda. The fundamental views underlying the Brahma-Vāda are as follows:

1. All this (world) is the ātman.
2. The ātman and the Brahman are identical. It automatically implies the identity of the Brahman and the Universe (sarvaṃ khalu idam brahma).
3. Reality of the world.
4. The theory of manifestation (āvirbhāva and concealment or obscuration (tiro-bhāva) of the universe.

5. The Brahman is the substratum of contradictory attributes (paraspara-viruddha-dharmāśraya).
6. Kṛṣṇa is the eternal supreme Brahman.

As the matter is to be discussed in details later, the fundamentals of the Brahma-Vāda are only listed here.

Vallabhācārya got married at Kāśī with Mahālakṣmī, the daughter of Devaṇa Bhaṭṭa who belonged to his own Veda and Sūtra. Vallabhācārya at first settled at Kāśī but owing to some local trouble, he decided to settle at Adail, a small village near Allahabad and led an ideal life of a gṛhastha (house-holder) according to Dharmasāstra. He got two sons, Viṭṭhala Nāth and Gopi Nāth. A number of religious leaders of his time were his friends despite their differences in philosophical views. Vyāsa Tirtha of Mādhva sect, Madhusūdana Sarasvatī, the author of Advaitasiddhi, the doyen of Kevalādvaitins, Gaurāṅga Prabhu Caitanya of Jagannāth Purī, the founder of Acintya-bhedābheda school of thought, Keśava Bhaṭṭa of Nimbārka school — to mention a few, were his friends. It may be due to Kṛṣṇa-bhakti, the common bond between Vallabhācārya and Madhusūdana Sarasvatī, both were very intimate despite their different views on māyā, Brāhman, nature of the world, etc. Madhusūdana Sarasvatī stayed in Vallabhācārya's house to hear the exposition of the Bhāgavata Purāṇa from Vallabhācārya. It was at Adail that a greater part of Subodhinī was written by Vallabhācārya. As I had perused commentaries of different schools on the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, I can say that the Subodhinī is one of the most lucid commentaries on the Bhāgavata Purāṇa. Unfortunately, as in the case of Aṅgu Bhāṣya (the commentary on the Brahma Sūtra) Vallabhācārya did not complete it.

Vallabhācārya continued his travels on and off. The present arrangement of worship, etc., of Kṛṣṇa at Mathurā, Śrī Nātha, Govardhan, etc., is said to be according to his instructions. Honours came to him from all over the country. It was while he was at the zenith of his fame and popularity, that Vallabhācārya decided to renounce his gṛhasthāśrama (the house-holder stage) and became a saṁnyāsin in AD 1530 (Samvat 1587, 10th lunar day in the dark half of Jyēṣṭha).

Before adopting the life of a recluse (saṁnyāsin), he entrusted his two young sons Gopināthji and Viṭṭhalanāthji to the care of his trusted disciple Dāmodardās Harṣāni.

After becoming a saṁnyāsin, Vallabhācārya went from Prayāga to Vārāṇasi to Hanumān Ghāṭ. There in the presence of the members of his family, disciples, Vaiṣṇavas and others, Vallabhācārya entered the Gaṅgā and took jala samādhi in AD 1530 (Saṁvat 1587, 3rd lunar day in the bright half of Āṣāḍha). They say that a supreme heavenly light was seen going up from the Gaṅgā. In puṣṭi mārga, they call it asura vyāmoha līlā.

In his last message, to put it briefly<sup>3</sup>, Vallabhācārya exhorts that Lord Kṛṣṇa is not an ordinary god. We entrust ourselves to Him for our good here and hereafter. Kṛṣṇa, the Lord of Gopīs, should always be served by us.

Lastly, it may be noted that though Vallabhācārya was a staunch devotee of Kṛṣṇa, he knew that Śiva is another name of the Brahman. Hence, he invokes Mahādeva (Kāśī Viśveśvara) to be witness to his refutation of the māyā-vāda in his work Patrāvalambana.<sup>4</sup> Vallabhācārya further expresses his hope in the same work, that god Mahādeva, the Lord of Kāśī, will be pleased by his establishment of the Brahma-Vāda.<sup>5</sup>

I have specifically mentioned this to dispel the misunderstanding that Vallabhācārya was a fanatic Vaiṣṇava. There is no scope for such a narrow-minded outlook in the Brahma-Vāda as Kṛṣṇa and Śiva are mere different designations or synonyms of the Brahman.

Notes

1. एकं शास्त्रं देवकीपुत्रगीतम्।
एको देवो देवकीपुत्र एव॥
मन्त्रोऽप्येकस्तस्य नाभानि यानि।
कर्माप्येकं तस्य देवस्य सेवा॥
2. The following verse from Tattvārtha-dīpa-nibandha (TDN) is supposed to refer to the above verse of Lord Jagannātha.

Vallabhācārya: A Life-Sketch

भगवच्छास्त्रमाज्ञाय विचार्य च पुनः पुनः ।

यदुक्तं हरिणा पश्चात् सन्देह-विनिवृत्तये ॥

— तत्त्वार्थ-दीप-निबन्ध, 1.3

3. न लौकिकः प्रभुः कृष्णो मनुते नैव लौकिकम् ।
भावस्तत्राप्यस्मदीयः सर्वस्वश्चैहिकश्च सः ॥
परलोकश्च तेनायं सर्वभावेन सर्वथा ।
सेव्यः स एव गोपीशो विधासत्यखिलं हि नः ॥
4. श्रीकृष्णस्य प्रसादेन मायावादो निराकृतः । अवैदिकः, महादेवस्तत्र साक्षी न संशयः ॥
— पञ्चावलम्बन, Verses 34B, 35A
5. स्थापितो ब्रह्मवादो हि सर्व-वेदान्त-गोचरः ।
काशीपतिस्त्रिलोकेशो महादेवस्तु तुष्यतु ॥
— पञ्चावलम्बन, Verses 36B, 37A

Evolution of Indian Philosophical Thought (From the Vedas to the Brahma Sūtra)

PHILOSOPHICAL concepts are generally a response of man to Nature. The early man was fascinated, mystified and even afraid to see the golden hues of the dawn and the dusk, the shining jewelled ornaments of stars spread all over the blue firmament, changing shapes of clouds of various colours and the rainbow, showers of water falling down from the sky, the fragrant flora and sweet fruits they offer, the frisking fawns and the terrifying peals of thunder. The world around him was not merely an object of wonder but a challenge to human intelligence.

He mused:

Whence has this world (creation) of infinite variety come into existence? Is it created by somebody? Or is it not created (by anybody. It is already in existence since eternity). Does the super-viewer (of this creation) who is in the highest heaven (paramē vyoman) know it? Or does he not know it.<sup>1</sup>

The ancients came to the conclusion:

- (1) He IS, and (2) He is NOT, i.e., the universe is there since eternity.

In the first category were some followers of Vedism (the so-called Brāhmanism by politically motivated foreign rulers and their Indian followers), who believed in some such HE or IT. Some followers of Vedism like Sāṃkhyas and Pūrva Mīmāṃsakas and non-Vedic thinkers like Jains and Buddhists belong to be second category.

Those who belonged to the first group investigated, pondered and debated for centuries about the nature of HE or IT, the cause of this universe. They believed that there is something — some Ultimate Principle (para tattva) at the basis of this universe. Within itself, it creates, sustains and withdraws within (Itself, i.e., annihilates) the universe. This principle must be both immanent and transcendent to the universe.

This belief or hypothesis regarding the 'ITNESS' of some such 'Thing' gave rise to the following problems:

- (1) What is the nature of this 'Thing'?
- (2) What is the relation of this 'Thing' with me? (i.e., Individual, man) and the world?

For centuries ancient Indian thinkers went on discussing these problems, suggesting different solutions. Ancient Brāhmaṇa Works, Āraṇyakas and Upaniṣads testify to the different views of ancient thinkers on these problems. Ultimately, there emerged three main patterns or thought-currents regarding these problems of relationship with the 'Thing'.

To put it simplistically, the following were the main thought-currents regarding this relationship:

- (1) The 'Thing', individual human beings and the world are intrinsically one or the same.
- (2) The 'Thing', individual men inter se and the world are essentially different.
- (3) The sentient (men, birds, beasts, etc.) are different from non-sentients (the inanimate world), but both the sentient and non-sentients any how form a part of the body of the 'Thing.'

On account of these three broad thought patterns, the followers of (1) came to be called Monists, (2) the followers of the second view are called Dualists, and (3) the followers of the third view became known as 'Qualified non-dualists'.<sup>1</sup> Advaita, Dvaita, and Viśiṣṭadvaita are the designations of these thought patterns. When you call the 'Thing' Kṛṣṇa or Viṣṇu, you are a Vaiṣṇava but you entertain the above three patterns of thought. When you designate the 'Thing' as Śiva, you are a Śaiva and have all these three thought patterns in Śaivism. The anatagonism between Vaiṣṇavas and Śaivas is baseless and unscientific.

At the outset, we must understand that the followers of a particular sect always follow or quote as authority, the predecessor of their own sect and NEVER that from the other sect, unless it is for the sake of refutation. Feuds between Śaivism and Vaiṣṇavism are facts of history. A Vaiṣṇava author will never take for support or quote a text from the rival sect. Śaivism of Dualist type was powerful in Kashmir before the sixth century AD. It practically swamped Monists in that Valley. Vasugupta (AD 825) revived Monism by writing the Śiva Sūtra and Spanda Kārikās. Eminent Monist teachers from Vasugupta to Abhinavagupta (tenth-eleventh century AD) re-established Monism in Kashmir and Śaiva Dualism slid southwards first to Madhya Pradesh and later to Tamil Nāḍu which became its strong-hold. Madhva (AD 1197-1226) belonged to Karnatak. He was a Vaiṣṇava Dualist. Nobody can accuse him of borrowing from a Śaiva work or a Śaivite teacher. But great minds think alike. And we find the following similarities between the Vaiṣṇava and Śaiva Dualists:

(1) Madhva advocates multiplicity of souls and their mutual difference, difference between God and individual souls, God and matter (the world). God is independent (svatantra).

The Dualistic school of Śaivism is called 'Śaiva Siddhānta' or 'Siddhānta Śaivism'. The school believes in the independent reality (non-relation between God, individual souls and the world and their eternity).

To be fair to Dualists, it must be conceded that there are many passages in the Śrutis which state the differences between the Brahman and the soul.

(2) Creation of the Universe: Śaiva Siddhānta and Mādharma dualists believe that God (Īśvara) is only an Efficient cause (nimitta kāraṇa) and not the material cause (upādāna kāraṇa) in the creation of the universe.

(3) Difference (Bheda): Bheda-pratyakṣa, i.e., difference between God and the soul is a matter of experience. This has been accepted both by Siddhānta Śaivas and Vaiṣṇava Dualists.

The Brahma Sūtra (BrSū) 4.4.17 states that released souls have all powers (of the Lord) except those of creation, sustenance and destruction of the world.<sup>2</sup>

They argue: If in the mokṣa stage, the individuality is retained as distinct from the Lord, it needs no argument to prove that they (individual souls) are distinctly different from God in the stage of bondage.

(4) God alone is svatantra (absolutely free), others (individual souls) are dependent on God.

The above comparison showing the identity of views in Śaiva and Vaiṣṇava Dualism is enough to show how dualistic Śaivas and Vaiṣṇavas agree on certain fundamental concepts, though there are some differences in details among them.

It need not be supposed that Śaiva and Vaiṣṇava thinkers of the same — ism or thought-pattern agreed in toto in all details. Thus Śaiva Monist — the Īśvarādvaya-vādi school of Kashmir Śaivism holds that the fundamental principle called Śiva is not only Universal consciousness but also the supreme spiritual power. This Highest Reality, the Absolute, is both transcendental (viśvottirṇa) and immanent (viśvanaya). It is both prakāśa (Knowledge) as well as vimarsā (difficult to translate adequately), though tentatively translated as Power or śakti. It can create the Universe by sheer Will-Power without any upādāna (material cause). But according to the Vaiṣṇava Monist — of Śrī Śāṅkara's school, the Highest Reality (Para-Brahman) is mere prakāśa (Knowledge). By itself, it has no power of creation unless it is associated with avidyā (Nescience). Abhinavagupta criticises this view as follows:<sup>3</sup>

If the Highest Reality did not manifest itself in infinite variety but remained cooped up in its solid singleness, it would neither be the Highest Power nor Consciousness but something inert like a jar.

I stated that Śaṅkara was a Vaiṣṇava on the strength of his guru-paramparā (line of spiritual teachers) which starts from Viṣṇu, as follows:

Viṣṇu — Brahmā — Parāśara — Vyāsa — Śuka — Gauḍapāda — Govinda Yati — Śaṅkara.

It is interesting to note that Vallabhācārya expresses a view similar to Kashmir Śaivas. While commenting on BrSū, 1.1.2, he says.<sup>4</sup>

The fact of the Brahman being omniscient and omnipotent can be proved only if it is uncontrolled and independent Agent of the world.

Again on BrSū, 1.1.3.:

The Brahman is both the inherent cause (samavāyi kartṛ) and the instrumental cause (nimitta kartṛ), otherwise it will not have complete independence in the power of Action or Knowledge.<sup>5</sup>

Another point of similarity between Kashmir Śaivas and Vallabha is about the nature of the world. Śaivas say that as Śiva is real, His action, the world, is real. Vallabhācārya commenting on BrSū, 2.1.14 says:

The Brahman is abhinna-nimittopādāna-kāraṇa (Non-differentiated Instrumental — Material cause). As the cause, viz., the Brahman is real, the Effect (the world) too is real as there is no difference between the Cause and the Effect.

BrSū, 2.1.15 states:

The non-difference of them (cause and effect, results) from words like beginning and others.<sup>6</sup>

The sūtra is very important as it is based on the Chāndogya Upaniṣad<sup>7</sup> 6.1.4. The purport of the Śruti is to establish one-ness or non-difference between the Cause and the Effect. Vallabhācārya positively notes in the commentary of the above sūtra, the non-difference between the effect (kārya) and the cause (kāraṇa).

I wish to point out that when there is a similarity of the thought in two different schools, it is not necessarily borrowed — Kashmir Śaivas based their philosophy on their twenty-eight-Śaiva Āgamas, while Vallabhācārya recognizes (1) Upaniṣads, (2) Bhagavad Gītā, (3) Brahma Sūtra and (4) Śrīmad Bhāgavata as the authorities.

It is an important characteristic of Indian authors, Vedists and non-Vedists, that they do not refer to or mention authors of their brother sects (for example, Śvetāmbara and Digāmbara Jains) even by name, much less about borrowing from them. Now I shall take an instance of Rāmānuja, the Vaiṣṇava Viśiṣṭādvaitin and Śrīkaṇṭha, a Śaiva Viśiṣṭādvaitin. A curious thing is that the Vaiṣṇava Rāmānuja tried to synthesize Vaiṣṇava Āgamas and Vedic texts while Śrīkaṇṭha whose Śaivism was based on twenty-eight Śaiva Āgamas based his bhāṣya on the BrSū, purely on Vedic texts. He called it Brahma-Mīmāṃsā-Bhāṣya. Both were followers of the same philosophy, it was natural that they should agree with each other in a number of views. But in the Introduction, Śrīkaṇṭha avers that his is the Upaniṣadic Mīmāṃsā. His bhāṣya is the essence of all Upaniṣads.<sup>8</sup>

S.S. Sūryanārāyaṇa Śāstri has given a list of sūtras showing the concurrence of views of those bhāṣya-kāras (see Appendix to his book Śivādvaita of Śrīkaṇṭha). But that does not mean that Śrīkaṇṭha does not differ from Rāmānuja in the interpretation of the BrSū. For example, in describing the process of death, the BrSū, 4.2.1. says that vāk (speech, i.e., power of speech) merges into the mind. In interpreting this sūtra, Rāmānuja says that laya is 'association' and not merger and quotes Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.8.6) in support of it.<sup>9</sup> Śaṅkara interprets laya as vṛtti-laya (the merging of the power of speech).<sup>10</sup> It is interesting to note that Śrīkaṇṭha follows Śaṅkara and explains that laya is not svarūpa-laya but vṛtti-laya.<sup>11</sup> There are also other differences.<sup>12</sup>

These ācaryas regarded the same texts as authorities.

Śruti: The Basis of all-isms

It is interesting to note that all Vaiṣṇava authors (and even Śaiva commentators on the BrSū) quote Śruti texts in support of their special doctrine. Thus when the Monist quote

Whatever that is, is definitely the Brahman

sarvam khalu idam brahma

— Chândogya Upaniṣad 3.14.1

Dualist counters by quoting: 'He (i.e. the Brahman) is not happy to lone (ekāki na ramate — Bṛhadâraṇyaka Upaniṣad, 1. 4. 3) and me be many. I procreate' (bahu syām prajāyeya — Taittirīya niṣad, 2.6.1).

All these are genuine quotations. None of these are amended or icated (though some âcāryas are tempted to 'emend' the Śruti texts uit their purpose).

The reasons of such contradictory statements are historical. Most hese speculations are the results of discussions held during the ure period while sacrifices were being performed or in the quiet osphere of forests or in the personal heart to heart talks between .er and son or the guru or âcārya and his disciples. Various views .e to be expressed in such discussions. Such discussions went on for 1y generations or centuries and were recorded at first in memory re they came to be written down.

isthānas

sthāna literally means 'foundation'. Certain ancient texts of hallenged validity were revered as the foundation of our philosophy

THE BHAGAVAD GĪTĀ

Attempts were made to bring some order in these various speculations. An attempt was made to systematize them under different topics. One such attempt that has come down to us is attributed to Śrī Kṛṣṇa Yādava — a historical person who passed away in 3102 BC — “On the very day, at the very hour, Kali Yuga set in”, as the consensus of all Purāṇas put it. The existence of the Yudiṣṭhira era is mentioned in ancient texts and even by the Arab Sanskrit scholar, Al Biruni (AD 1037). The Mahābhārata tells us that when, at the beginning of the Bhārata War, Arjuna got demoralised on moral grounds, Kṛṣṇa told him some philosophical home truths and encouraged him to fight. It seems that later on, some Vyāsa has recorded those discourses under the headings such as Sāṁkhya, Yoga, Karma, etc. The Bhagavad Gītā is a fine summary of Upaniṣadic teachings on various topics. The Bhagavad Gītā or the ‘Song of the Lord’ is ‘the milk of cows in the form of Upanisads milked by Gopāla Kṛṣṇa for Arjuna’. This best nectarine milk is the essence of Upaniṣadic teaching. Ācāryas of different schools of philosophy have written erudite commentaries to show that this text supports their philosophical stance.

By the way, it may be noted that Abhinavagupta, the great Kashmiri philosopher, does not believe in the historical setting of the Bhagavad Gītā and regards the Bhārata War as a conflict between Good and Evil. The text of Abhinavagupta is the Kashmiri version of the Bhagavad Gītā which is at many places different from the text used by non-Kashmiri teachers. All ācāryas regard the Bhagavad Gītā as the second prasthāna.

THE BRAHMA SŪTRA

This third prasthāna is known as the Brahma Sūtra (BrSū), as the text begins with the word ‘Brahma’: athāto brahma-jijñāsā. But it is also known as Uttara-Mīmāṃsā (the latter half of the Mīmāṃsā; the former half is known as Pūrva-Mīmāṃsā), Brahma-Mīmāṃsā, Bādarāyaṇa Sūtra, Śārīraka Sūtra.

Even after the Upaniṣadic period, philosophical discussions and disputations continued in which thinkers of various schools of thought such as Bārhaspatyas, Sāṃkhyas, Pāñcarātrikas, Pāsupatas, Buddhists and Jains participated actively. There arose a need to reconcile discordant Upanisadic views and next, to meet the criticisms of Vedists like Sāṃkhyas and non-Vedists like Buddhists and Jains. This stupendous tough task is credited to have been achieved by one Bādarāyaṇa. The Brahma Sūtra became the popular title of the work as the first sūtra announces brahma-jijñāsā. Later on it became famous as Vedānta Sūtra. Its real — original — name seems to be Śārīraka Sūtra. H. Nakamura, in Early Vedanta Philosophy (p. 426) notes that early authors like Upavarṣa and Bodhāyana record its name as Śārīraka Sūtru. Śaṅkara has adopted Śrīraka Sūtra as the name of the text commented upon by him. The word sārīraka means 'that which has a body'. It literally means 'the individual soul'. I doubt whether the Brahma Sūtra (BrSū) uses the word sārīraka in the sense of 'the Brahman'. I would like to know which sūtra in the BrSū explicitly states or implies that the body of the Brahman is constituted of the cit (Conscious) and acit (non-conscious and non-intelligent parts). Padmapāda, the direct disciple of Śaṅkara and the earliest commentator on his (Śārīraka's) Bhāṣya states explicitly:

Śārīraka is jīva and the work pertaining to it is Śūrīraka.<sup>13</sup>

I do not know what Upavarṣa and Bodhāyana implied by this term.

We are not concerned here with the problem whether Dharma (Pūrva) Mīmāṃsā attributed to Jaimini and Brahma-Mīmāṃsā attributed to Bādarāyaṇa constituted one Mīmāṃsā Sūtra. It is significant that Vallabhācārya wrote commentaries on both the Mīmāṃsās.

BrSū was not written 'at one sitting' but it belongs to the category of 'the literature of growth'. It consists of quotations from the R̥gveda, Śatapatha, and Aitareya Brāhmaṇas. But most of the quotations are from Upaniṣads. The majority of the quotations are from the Chāndogya Upaniṣad and next to it from the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad (in number). All the quotations are from the oldest stratum of Upaniṣads. Belvalkar in his 'Lectures' (Basu Mallik Lectures on Vedanta Philosophy, Pune 1929, pp. 142-46) tried to reconstruct the 'original' part of the BrSū. Even if we ignore that attempt as it is a personal opinion of Belvalkar, the various references in the text of BrSū show its period of composition to be circa 300 BC as we find that the Upaniṣads quoted belong to the older strata. No new Upaniṣads are quoted.

As the BrSū belongs to the category of 'Literature of Growth' differences of opinions, views of teachers belonging to different centuries came to be recorded in the same book. The contents of the BrSū are given in the next chapter. The names of pre-Brahma Sūtra teachers and the views attributed to them are given therein.

Notes

1. A free translation of:
इयं विसृष्टिर्यत आबभूव यदि वा दधे, यदि वा न दधे।
योऽस्याध्यक्षः परमे व्योमन्, सोऽङ्ग वेद यदि वा न वेद॥
— RV, 10.187.7 (नासदीय सूक्त)
2. जगद्व्यापारवर्जं प्रकरणात् असनिहितत्वाच्च।
— BrSū, 4.4.17
3. अस्थास्यदेकरूपेण वपुषा चेन्महेश्वरः।
महेश्वरत्वं सौवित्त्वं तदत्यक्षद् घटादिवत्॥
— तन्त्रालोक, III.100
4. तस्मात् सर्वज्ञत्वं, सर्वशक्तित्वं च सिद्धं निरङ्कुश-जगत्कर्तृत्वेन।
— अणुभाष्य on BrSū, 1-1.2
5. तत्र किं समवायि-निमित्तकर्तृ वा. . यद्येकमेव स्यात् तदा क्रिया-ज्ञानशक्तयोर्निरतिशयत्वं भज्येत। मृदादि-साधारण्यं स्यात्। Later on BrSū, 1.1.3 Vallabhācārya says: अस्ति-भाति प्रियत्वेन सृष्टिदानन्दरूपेण अन्वयत्वात्, नामरूपयोः कार्यत्वात्, etc.
— Ibid., on BrSū, 1.1.3
6. तदनन्यत्वमारम्भणशब्दादिभ्यः।
— BrSū, 2.114
7. यथा सौर्य्यकेन मृत्पिण्डेन सर्वं मृन्मयं विज्ञातः स्यात्, वाचारम्भणं विकारो नामधेयं मृत्तिकेत्येव सत्यम्।
— छान्दोग्य उपनिषद्, 6.1.4
8. सर्व-वेदान्त-सारस्य सौरभास्वादमोदिनाम्।
आर्याणां शिवनिष्ठानां भाष्यमेतन्महानिधिः॥
— Introduction to Brahma-Mīmāṃsā Bhāṣya

9. वाङ्.मनसि सम्पद्यते (छान्दोग्य, 6.8.6) इति वचनात् मनसा वाक् सम्पद्यते, न तु तत्र लीयते।
— श्रीभाष्य on BrSū, 4.2.1
(Karamarkara's Tramlation, p. 987)
10. तस्मादत्र वृत्त्युपसंहार विवक्षा।
वाग्वृत्तिः पूर्वं मुपसे ह्रियते मनोवृत्ताववस्थितायाम् इत्यर्थः।
— शारीरभाष्य on BrSū, 4.2.1 (8. 856)
11. वागादीनां मनसि न स्वरूपस्य उच्यते किन्तु वृत्तिलय एव।
ब्रह्ममीमांसा भाष्य, II, p. 451
12. G.V. Tagare, Śaiva Darśan (Marāṭhī), pp. 162-74.
13. शरीरमेव शरीरकम्, शरीरके भवः शारीरकः जीवः। तभधिकृत्य कृतो ग्रन्थः शारीरकः॥
— पञ्चपादिका, p. 40

Pre-Brahma Sūtra Teachers

As we have seen that the Brahma Sūtra (BrSū) is an attempt to systematize the various strands of thoughts in the Upaniṣads, it reflects the systems of thought known at that time. Naturally Bādarāyaṇa quotes ancient teachers who entertained different views on important points of doctrines. Modern readers may not be interested in the topics regarding Vaiśvānara or the span-like size of the ātman or whether the priest or the yajamāna should perform the japa (muttering of mantras). But in those times, people regarded them as important topics for discussion. We find that Bādarāyaṇa records the viewpoints of those ancient (pre-Brahma Sūtra) teachers.

Contents of the BrSū.

The Brahma Sūtra has four chapters or adhyāyas each of which is divided into four pādas (parts), each pāda being subdivided into adhikaraṇas (sections, topics) consisting of sūtras. Each section deals with a specific point. If the section consists of more than one sūtra, generally the first sūtra(s) states an objection (pūrva-pakṣa) and the latter part of the section refutes the objection and states the siddhānta.

According to Pūrva-Mimāṃsā every adhikaraṇa or section has five factors:

1. Viśaya — subject-matter
2. Viśaya — doubt or uncertainty
3. Pūrva-pakṣa — statement of objection

4. Siddhānta — established conclusion or the final decision
5. Saṅgati — connection between different sections

In spite of different philosophical views, commentators have normally preserved the arrangement of topics, the meaning of the sūtras to a great extent, references to the texts intended and *viśaya-vākya*s.<sup>1</sup>

As stated above, the BrSū consists of four chapters:

1. Samanvaya — It tries to offer coherent interpretation of different texts of the Upaniṣads. The method of reconciliation has some social implications as well.
2. Avirodha consists of the refutation of the objections of rival schools (and criticism of their tenets), Sāṃkhyas, Jains, Buddhists, Pāñcarātras, etc. It shows the consistency and correctness of the views in the first chapter.
3. Sādhana gives the exposition of the means for the realization of the Brahman.
4. Phala or Fruit of Knowledge is the topic of the fourth (and the last) chapter.

Pre-Brahma Sūtra Teachers

Bādarāyaṇa gives the following list of previous (pre-Brahma Sūtra) teachers. (For the sake of convenience, they are alphabetically arranged here). (1) Āśmarathya, (2) Ātreya, (3) Auḍulomi, (4) Bādarāyaṇa, (5) Bādari, (6) Jainini, (7) Kārṣṇājini, (8) Kāśakṛtsna.

1. ĀŚMARATHYA

The name Āśmarathya is found in Āśvalaṅyana Śrauta Sūtra and Mīmāṃsā Sūtra (6.5.16). Hence, he seems to be an expert in rituals and ritualistic Mīmāṃsā. Pāṇini (4.3.105) mention Āśmaratha Kalpa as a new ritualistic learning which shows that he lived earlier than Pāṇini.

The views of Āśmarathya are mentioned under two topics in the BrSū.

- (1) Vaiśvānara is Brahman (1.2. 24-32).
- (2) The self to be seen, heard, etc., is the highest self on account of the connection of the texts.

The first Sūtra

Abhivyakter ity āśmarathyah, 1.2.29 occurs in section of the first chapter. In this section, sūtras 1.2.24 to 1.2.27 show that the term Vaiśvānara does not imply gastric or abdominal fire. It is neither the Fire-god nor the gross element (mahābhūta) called Fire, Vaiśvānara is the Para-Brahman.

Āśmarathya opines that the Chāndogya Upanisad (5.18.1) mentioned that Vaiśvānara or the Brahman is measured by a span. Though the Supreme is transcendental of all measures, it manifests itself (abhivyakti) for its devotees in a limited form. The opinion is expressed in the sūtra which literally means:

On account of manifestation (abhivyakti) (thinks) Āśmarathya.

Rāmānuja and Śrīkaṇṭha interpret the word abhivyakti as 'definiteness'.

Bādari (another pre-BrSū teacher) supports the view, stating that the Highest self said to be measured by a span since he is remembered (anusmṛtaḥ) by means of the mind located in the heart of span-length. Jaimini (another pre-BrSū teacher) says that it is appropriate to call the Highest self pradeśa-mātra (of the dimension of a span) and scriptures declares him to be so imagined (sampatteḥ) for the purpose of meditation (1.2.31).

Vallabhācārya interprets Āśmarathya's view in BrSū 1.2.29, as follows:

The Brahman is formless. It is concealed by the screen (javanikā) of māyā. When māyā disappears, the Brahman manifests itself as Viṣṇu or Puruṣa Vaiśvānara. The māyā enveloped form of the Brahman is not real. The real form implied by Āśmarathya is sacchīdānanda-rūpa (comprised of existence, consciousness and bliss).

Vallabhācārya firmly states that strong proof should be adduced to whatever view is expressed.<sup>2</sup>

The (Visible Self: The Great Self)

Āśmarathya holds that (the visible, audible) self is the Highest self. BrSū, 1.4.20 answers the doubt raised in the previous sūtra whether the ātman to be seen, heard, etc., mentioned in the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad<sup>3</sup>(4.5.6.) is the individual self or the Highest self. Āśmarathya, opines that the reference to the individual soul to be seen or heard indicates the proof of the statement (pratijñā siddhi). If the individual soul is different from the supreme soul, the former will not know the latter and the statement: 'though the knowledge of one thing, all things are known' will become invalid. There is non-difference between the individual self and Supreme Self.

Bhāskara explains that the relations between the two (the individual Soul and the Supreme Soul) is like that between fire and the sparks emanating from the fire. It is the doctrine of bhedābheda (difference-cum-non-difference) which was taught in old Upaniṣads like Bṛhadāraṇyaka (2.1.20) and Muṇḍaka, (2.1.1). And this analogy of Fire-sparks relation is adopted by later Vedānta writers.

Thus, according to Bhāskara, the relation between individual soul and the Supreme Soul is bhedābheda (difference-cum-non-difference). It is neither absolutely different nor non-different from the Brahman, as it is like the sparks that emanate from the fire.

Auḍulomi (another pre-BrSū, teacher) teaches that the soul is altogether different from the Brahman up to the time of his final release, when it is merged into the Brahman (BrSū, 1.4.21). Thus, Auḍulomi suggests difference between the individual Soul and the Brahman in the state of bondage and non-difference in the mokṣa stage. Kāśakṛtsna (another pre-BrSū, teacher) regards the individual soul is absolutely non-different from the Brahman as the individual soul abides in (avasthiteḥ) in the Supreme (BrSū, 1.4.22).

Vallabhācārya quotes the above views of Āśmarathya, Auḍulomi, Kāśakṛtsna and comes to the conclusion that the doctrine of causality of prakṛti is not supported by Śruti. Only Brahma-Vāda is tenable.<sup>4</sup>

2. ĀTREYA

This sage Ātreya in BrSū, is different from Bhikṣu Ātreya of the fifth century AD who is mentioned in the Caraka Saṁhitā. Ātreya was a respectable scholar of the Veda and Vedic rituals as his name occurs in the Mīmāṃsā Sūtra, Kātyāyana Śrauta Sūtra and Bodhāyana Gṛhya Sūtra.

There is nothing philosophical about his doctrine. The problem is whether meditations (sāma-songs, etc.) connected with sacrificial acts are to be performed by the priest (employed for the sacrifice) or by the sacrificer (yajamāna). The problem is: who is the agent, the priest employed or the sacrificer (employer). Ātreya holds that the agentship of the act belongs to the sacrificer because he is the receiving the fruit of the sacrifice.<sup>5</sup>

But Auḍulomi differs. He says that the priest is paid for the act and as such he (the priest) must observe the meditations (because) they are the work of the priest.<sup>6</sup> Śaṅkara quotes the Chāndogya Upaniṣad (1.7.8) and holds that Auḍulomi is correct. The next sūtra states that this view is endorsed by Śrūti texts.

3. AUDULOMI

Auḍulomi was a respectable thinker of his age. In addition to his philosophical contribution, he seems to wield influence in the field of grammar as Patañjali mentions him in the Mahābhāṣya on Pāṇini 4.1.83.

Auḍulomi's view as against Ātreya's is discussed above. He is mentioned in BrSū, 1.4.21 about the relation of individual soul with the Supreme Soul (see above on Āśmarathya). He opines that the identification of the individual soul with the Supreme Soul is possible because when the individual soul 'rises' to depart from the body) he becomes one with the Supreme Soul.<sup>7</sup>

Thus, Auḍulomi holds that up to the time of final release (mokṣa), the soul is different from the Brahman but after that, he merges with the Brahman bereft of his name and form like rivers joining the sea.<sup>8</sup>

This Bhedābheda-Vāda of Auḍulomi is explained by Bhāskara and Vācaspati Miśra by quoting from Pañcarātra Āgama.<sup>9</sup>

Up to Liberation, the individual self and the Supreme Self are different. But when liberated, there exists no distinction or a cause for distinction.

— Bhāmati on 1.4.21

Śrīpati fully endorses the Bhedābheda-Vāda. Later the section on the state of the released soul in the mukta state, Auḍulomi believes<sup>10</sup> (BrSū, 4.4.6).

Solely as pure intelligence or consciousness (the soul manifests itself) as that being its self: Thus Auḍulomi thinks. This is opposed to Jaimini's view in BrSū, 4.4.5. Jaimini thinks that the released soul's nature is like that of Brahman. It possesses qualities mentioned in Chāndogya Upaniṣad, 8.7.1. (The self is free from evil, old age, death, grief, hunger and thirst. There is such a freedom in all the world.)<sup>11</sup>

Bādarāyaṇa accepts Audulomi's view as against Jaimini's.

Vallabhācārya does not regard that there is any contradiction between the views of Jaimini and Auḍulomi as the soul's enjoyment is attributed to the volition (saṅkalpa) of the Brahman.

4. BĀDARĀYAṆA

Bādarāyaṇa is traditionally believed to be the author of the Brahma Sūtra (BrSū). Respectable Vedānta teachers like Madhva, Rāmānuja, Vallabha identify him with Veda-Vyāsa, the author of the Mahābhārata and the compiler of the Vedas. But the very fact that the Vedas and the Mahābhārata were already compiled before the BrSū shows that Bādarāyaṇa (the popularly believed author of BrSū) and Veda-Vyāsa are different persons. Some scholars believe that as the BrSū quotes some views as those of Bādarāyaṇa as if, he is the third person, Bādarāyaṇa cannot be the author of BrSū. It is, however, the practice of ancient Indian authors to mention their views in the third person as is done by Jaimini, Kauṭilya, Vātsyāyana (the author of Kāma-Sūtra). Winternitz suggests that the work is a compilation of scholars of Bādarāyaṇa's school and not the actual work of one author, viz. Bādarāyaṇa.

The references to Bādarāyaṇa in BrSū have been accepted as Siddhānta by commentators but the final verdict of the last redactor of BrSū does NOT necessarily accept these views as authoritative, though in majority of cases the redactor regards Bādarāyaṇa's views as authoritative.

As Bādarāyaṇa's views on every topic in BrSū are included in the present text, they are not separately listed here.

5. BĀDARI

Bādari seems to be well-versed in Vedic scholarship and rituals in general as his name as expert in Vedic ritual is mentioned in the Mīmāṃsā Sūtra (6.1.27), Kātyāyana Śrauta Sūtra. His views are quoted on the following topics:

a. Vaiśvānara: Brahman: Extent

The point under discussion is why the Chāndogya Upaniṣad (5.18) should teach that Vaiśvānara fire (i.e. the self or the Supreme Soul) should be worshipped as of being of a span in extent.<sup>12</sup> Āśmarathya explains that the Supreme Soul, though immeasurable, manifests Himself as being of a limited space for facilitating His worship (BrSū, 1.2.29). On this Rāmānuja and Śrikanṭha say that the Lord assumes a definite form for facilitating the concentration of devotees. But Bādari explains (BrSū, 1.2.30) that this extent (space of one span) is presumed as if He is remembered in the mind. He is located in a span-sized heart.

Brahmasūtrakāra accepts Bādari's views.<sup>13</sup>

b. Soul's new embodiment: Nature of the new birth determined by the clinging Karmas

The point arose from the statement in the Chāndogya Upaniṣad (5.10.7) which says:

Those of excellent (ramaṇīya) conduct get an excellent category of birth such as brāhmaṇa or kṣatriya but with bad (kapūya) conduct obtain a bad or contemptible birth like that of a cāṇḍala or a dog.<sup>14</sup>

Kārṣṇājini (a pre-BrSū teacher) thinks:<sup>15</sup>

If it is said that on account of conduct (the assumption of residual karma is not necessary) we (Kārṣṇājini) say that it is not so (for the word carāṇa 'conduct' is used) to denote indirectly (the residual karma) — so thinks Kārṣṇājini. (BrSū, 3.1.9)

As karma is determined by good conduct, it (conduct) is not purposeless. It is karma and not conduct which is the seed of new birth.

But according to Bādari:<sup>16</sup>

(Conduct means) good and evil karmas only (eva). There is no real difference between conduct (carāṇa) and karma. So residual karma is the cause of a new birth on the earth.

The author of BrSū accepts this view.

e. Speculation: Post-death state of the soul

The topic begins with Bādari's assertion:

To the kārya Brahman (saguṇa Brahman or apara Brahman) the souls are led, on account of the possibility of being the goal (gatya-patteḥ).<sup>17</sup>

Bādari means to say that by kārya, saguṇa or apara Brahman is implied the possibility of the act of going, if the hypothesis of Brahmaloka and the soul's journey through the moon, etc., is presumed. As the Brahman is a cause or nirguṇa Brahman is all-pervading and is the inner-soul (anturātman) of all, the hypothesis of 'going to' is untenable.

Śaṅkara accepts this view in the conclusion of his commentary on this sūtra.<sup>18</sup>

Rāmānuja (as interpreted by Karmarkar) on this sūtra:

Not, indeed, in the case of the worshipper of the Highest Brahman which is perfect all around, omniscient, all-pervading, the ātman of all, is appropriate in going to another region to attain to it (para-Brahman).<sup>19</sup>

Rāmānuja does not believe in complete merger of the soul with the Brahman.

d. Released Souls: Embodied or Bodyless

The possession of Will means the released soul has a mind. But Bādari says he has not the organs or the body (abhāvum) as it is said in the scriptures (Chāndogya Upaniṣad, 8.12.5) the mind is his divine eye wherewith he rejoices:

manasā eva etān kāmān paśyan ramate
— Chāndogya Upaniṣad, 8.12.5

Radhakrishnan says that such a soul possesses mind only and not the body (Brahma Sūtra, p. 556). In the Ultimate stage of liberation the (bodyless) soul returns to this natural stage (Brahmahood).

Vallabhācārya: According to puṣṭi-mārga one gets a body from God. Therewith the soul enjoys the bliss of bhājana (Devotion).

6. JAIMINI

Jaimini was one of the the greatest ācāryas of the pre-BrSū period. A branch of Sāmaveda, a Brāhmaṇa work, and an Upaniṣad and Gṛhya Sūtra are associated with his name. The tradition, however, confirms that he wrote the following works:

(1) (Pūrva) Mīmāṃsā Sūtra, (2) Devatākāṇḍa and (3) Śārīraka Sūtra.

Upavaṛṣa and Bodhāyana, wrote commentaries on his Mīmāṃsā Sūtra but they are superseded by Śabarasvāmin who, in his Bhāṣya, mentions the names of these precursors. Sureśvara believes that Jaimini wrote a Śātrīka Sūtra and quotes the first two sūtras found in the extant BrSū, though Jaimini's Brahma Sūtra has not come down to us.

The BrSū quotes Jaimini at the following places: 1.2.28, 1.2.31, 1.3.31, 1.4.18, 3.2.40, 3.4.2, 3.4.18, 3.4.40, 4.3.12, 4.4.5, and 4.4.11.

The name of the topic and Jaimini's opinion on each of them is as follows:

BrSū, 1.2.28

The topic is whether Vaiśvānara in Chāndogya Upaniṣad, (V.1.18) means Brahman. Jaimini says “There is no contradiction even if the Supreme Self is taken as the object to worship (as Vaisvānara) directly.”<sup>20</sup>

BrSū, 1.2.31: The dimension of God — a span

Jaimini: (God is said to be a span in length) on account of the imaginative identification. What Jaimini means “it is proper to call the Supreme Self (pradeśa mātra) of the length of a span for the purpose of meditation”. Hence Chāndogya's (5.11-18) statement.<sup>21</sup>

BrSū, 1.3.31

The topic is about the eligibility of gods for the knowledge of the Brahman. Jaimini says: “On account of the impossibility (of the gods having a right to the knowledge of) the honey and the rest, (gods) are not eligible because they cannot themselves become the object of their own meditation.”<sup>22</sup>

BrSū, 1-4-18: Topic: Causality of the Brahman

According to Kauṣṭhiki Upaniṣad (4.19) the Maker (Creator) of the world alone should be known. But it is the individual Soul, prāṇa (chief vital breath or the Supreme Soul) that is to be so known. Jaimini says: Even if we presume that it is a reference to individual soul, it is only to indicate the knowledge of the Brahman. The self exists beyond (life principle and the jīva (individual Soul)).<sup>23</sup>

3.2.40

The topic is whether the merits or demerits (for one's karmas) conferred by God or they are the automatic results of the karmas of the person concerned.

Jaimini holds that religious merits (is what brings about the fruits of karmas). The scriptural injunctions such as svargakāmo yajeta gives no scope to an outside agent like God to impart the fruit.<sup>24</sup> He takes his stand on the anūrva theory in Pūrva Mīmāṃsā Sūtra, 2.1.5. Bādarāyaṇa refutes it in the next Sūtra (BrSū, 3.2.41).

3.4.2: Topic: The knowledge of Brahman is independent and not subordinate to Karma

In the previous sūtra (3.4.1) of Bādarāyaṇa on the strength of Chāndogya Upaniṣad (7.1.3), states that the knowledge of Brahman leads to liberation and is not a part of sacrificial karmas. As against this, Jaimini says:<sup>25</sup> The Self is in a supplementary position to karma (śeṣatvāt). Hence (the statement as to the fruits of knowledge of the Self) are mere praise of the Agent even as in other cases. In plain words; for Jaimini the knowledge of the Self has no independent fruit of its own because the knowledge of the self as the agent in all actions stands in subordinate relation to action (ritual). Jaimini is rather biased to ritualistic karmas.

3.4.18: Topic: Prescription of only Brahma vidyā in Saṁsāra

Regarding preservation of Knowledge (Brahma vidyā) in the state of saṁsāra, Jaimini opposes saṁnyāsa, for Upaniṣads like the Chāndogya, 2.23.1, only refer to saṁnyāsa and there is no injunction (to take it). Other texts condemn it.<sup>26</sup>

3.4.40: Topic: Non-reversion from Saṁnyāsa to the previous stage

Jaimini says that one who has entered the saṁnyāsa stage cannot go back to the previous stages of life, for the texts (Śrūtis) do not speak of reversion but only of ascent to the higher stages of life.<sup>27</sup>

4.3.12: Topic: The Devayāna Path leads to Saguṇa Brahma

Souls are led to the highest (Brahman). When two meanings are possible, the higher one should be preferred.<sup>28</sup> Brahman can mean the higher and lower. Jaimini says that the higher meaning should be adopted vide Chāndogya Upaniṣad, 4.15.5.

4.4.5: The Topic: Characteristics of the released Soul

Jaimini asserts that (the released soul exists) as possessed of the nature of the Brahman as mentioned in the Chāndogya Upaniṣad (8.7.1).

Jaimini thinks that the released soul is like the Brahman in nature.<sup>29</sup> It possesses qualities mentioned in the Chāndogya Upaniṣad (8.7.1).

The soul which is free from evil, free from old age, free from death, free from grief, free from hunger and thirst, whose desire is real, whose thought is real. For such there is freedom in all the world.

4.4.11: The Topic: Released souls — embodied or disembodied

Released souls are embodied or disembodied according to their will. Jaimini thinks that there is presence of the body and sense-organs because the scriptures desire capacity to assume diverse forms.<sup>30</sup>

Whatever be the impressions carried by the expression of diverse views of Jaimini, he, though author of the Pārva Mīmāṃsā, was also deeply studied in Upaniṣads or Vedānta (Uttara-Mīmāṃsā).

7. KĀRṢṆĀJINI

Kārṣṇājini is mentioned in Mīmāṃsā Sūtra (4.3.17) and Kātyāyana Śrauta Sūtra. He seems to be an expert in ritual.

The topic is the determination of new birth according to karmas.

Kārṣṇājini says: If it be said that depending upon conduct (in this world one attains various births) it is not so. The word conduct (carāṇa) in the BrSū (III.1.9) refers to the remainder of the karma. The man who does not perform good conduct cannot obtain food reward even if he does carry out the rituals. This idea is confirmed later in Vasiṣṭha Smṛti (6.3) which says “The Vedas do not purify the man who is devoid of good conduct and good conduct determines karma and is therefore not purposeless.” In BrSū, III.1.11 Bādari clarifies ‘there is no difference between conduct or carāṇa and karma’.

Kaśa Kṛtsna or Kāśakṛtsni

There are two spellings of this ācārya’s name — Kāśakṛtsna and Kāśakṛtsni but they are the names of the same teacher. Kāśakṛtsna was a Vedic scholar. Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara Miśra mentions him along with Yāska. His name occurs in Baudhāyana Gṛhya Sūtra. The Kātyāyana

Śrauta Sūtra mentions him along with ancient teachers like Bādan and Kārṣṇājini. Patañjali mentions him as a Mimāṃsā writer and the students of that Mimāṃsā were called Kāśakṛtsnas, a form accepted as ancient one and therefore, an accepted form in Kāśikā (on Pāṇini 4.3.3.01). Helarāja, a commentator on Bhartṛhari's Vākyapadīya attributes a grammatical work to Kāśakṛtsna.

The BrSū knows him as a philosopher and accepts his views on the relation between the individual self and the Supreme Soul.

Before accepting Kāśakṛtsna's view as Siddhānta BrSū quoted the views of Āśmarathya, and Auḍulomi. By the term avasthiteḥ in the sūtra 1.4.22, Kāśakṛtsna means the relation between the individual self and the Supreme Self are not of complete non-difference but the individual self is a part of (aṃśa), i.e. a constituent of the Higher Self.<sup>31</sup> For in BrSū, 2.3.43 'aṃśo nānā-uyapadeśat, etc.' suggests that the soul is a part of the Brahman, as the sparks are of fire. In the Śruti there are statements showing difference and non-difference in the Soul and the Brahman (Bhedābheda) and that the individual self is only an aṃśa, a constituent part of the Brahman.

The Bhedābheda-Vāda of Kāśakṛtsna influenced later ācāryas like Bhāskara and Vallabha.

The contribution of the Brahma Sūtrapūrvā teachers is generally passed over in histories of Indian philosophy. As they have influenced later philosophers liked Bhāskara, Vallabha and others, their specific contribution is noted here.

Notes

1. Radhakrishnan — The Brahma Sūtra, Introduction, pp. 23-24.
2. तस्मात् प्रमाणमेवानुवर्तव्यम् । न युक्तिः । शब्दबल-विचार एव युक्तिः ।
— AB on BrSū, 1.2.32, Vol. II, p. 600
3. आत्मा वा अरे द्रष्टव्यः, श्रोतव्यो निदिध्या सितव्यः . . . . आत्मनि खल्वरे दृष्टे, श्रुते, मते, विज्ञात इदःसर्वं विज्ञातं भवति ।
— बृहदारण्यक उपनिषद्, 4.5.6
4. See The concluding portion of AB on BrSū, 1.4.23 Vallabhācārya's final conclusion: श्रुतिसामर्थ्यं प्रमाणमित्युक्तम् । तस्माद् ब्रह्म एव समवायकारणं न प्रकृतिः ।

5. स्वामिनः फलश्रुतेरित्याभेदः ।
— BrSā, 3.4.44
6. आर्त्विज्यम् इति औद्दुलोमिः । तस्मै हि परिक्रौयते ।
— BrSā, 3.4.45
7. उत्क्रमिष्यत एवं भावादित्यौद्दुलोमिः ।
— BrSā, 1.4.21
8. Major commentaries on the BrSā on this sātra quote the following verse in support of their view:
यथा नद्यः स्यन्दमानाः समुद्रेऽस्तं गच्छन्ति नामरूपे विहाय ।
तथा विद्वान् नामरूपाद् वियुक्तः परात्परं पुरुषमुर्षति दिव्यम् ॥
9. आमृक्तेर्भेद एव स्याज्जीवस्य च परस्य च ।
मुक्तस्य तु न भेदोऽस्ति देहहेतोरभावतः ॥
— पाञ्चरात्र quoted in भामनी, 1.4.21
10. चितितन्मात्रेण तदात्मकत्वाद् इति औद्दुलोमिः ।
— BrSā, 4.4.6
11. य आत्माऽपहतपाप्मा विजतो विमृत्युर्विशोकोऽन्वेष्टव्यः ।
— छान्दोग्य उपनिषद्, 8.7.1
12. एते वै खलु . . . . यस्त्वेतं एवं प्रादेशमात्रमभिविमानमात्मानं वैश्वानरमुपास्ते स सर्वेषु लोकेषु सर्वेषु भूतेषु सर्वेष्व्वात्मस्वनमन्ति ।
— छान्दोग्य उपनिषद्, 5.18.1
13. अनुस्मृतेर्वादरिः ।
— BrSā, 1.2.30
14. तद् य इह रमणीय-चरणा अभ्याशो ह यत्ते रमणीयां योनिमापद्येरन् . . . . अथ य कपूय-चरणा (of bad conduct) अभ्याशो ह यत्ते कपूया (low) योनिमापद्येरन् ।
— छान्दोग्य उपनिषद्, 5.10.7
15. चरणादिति चेत्, न, उपलक्षणार्थेति काष्ठाजिनिः ।
— BrSā, 3.1.9
16. सुकृत-दुष्कृते एवेति तु वादरिः ।
— BrSā, 3.1.11
17. कार्यं वादरिरस्य गत्युपपत्तेः ।
— BrSā, 4.3.7
18. अस्य हि कार्यब्रह्मणो गन्तव्यत्वमुपपद्यते, प्रदेशवत्त्वात् । न तु परस्मिन् ब्रह्मणि गन्तव्यं गन्तव्यत्वं गतिर्वा न कल्पते ।
— Śaṅkara on BrSā, 4.3.7, p. 880

19. न हि परिपूर्णं सर्वज्ञं सर्वगतं सर्वात्मीभूतं परब्रह्मोपासीनस्य तत्प्राप्तये देशान्तरगतिरुपपद्यते, प्राप्तत्वादेव।
— Rāmānuja on Ibid., Vol. III, p. 1026
20. साक्षादप्यविरोधं जैमिनिः।
— BrSū, 1.2.28
21. सम्पत्तेरिति जैमिनिस्तथा हि दर्शयति।
— BrSū, 1.2.31
22. मध्वादिष्वसम्भवादनधिकारं जैमिनिः।
— BrSū, 1.3.31
23. अन्याद्यं तु जैमिनिः प्रश्नव्याख्यानाभ्यामपि चैवमेके।
— BrSū, 1.4.18
24. धर्मं जैमिनिरत एव।
— BrSū, 3.2.40
25. शेषत्वात् पुरुषार्थवादो यथान्येष्विति जैमिनिः।
— BrSū, 3.4.2
26. परामर्शं जैमिनिरचोदना चापवदति हि।
— BrSū, 3.4.18
27. तद्भूतस्य तु नातद्भावः, जैमिनेरपि नियमात् तद्रूपामावेभ्यः।
— BrSū, 3.4.40
28. परं जैमिनिर्मुख्यत्वात्।
— BrSū, 4.3.12
29. ब्राह्मेण जैमिनिरुपन्यासादधिः।
— BrSū, 4.4.5
30. भावं जैमिनिर्विकस्पापननात्।
— BrSū, 4.4.11
31. अवस्थितेरिति काशकृत्स्नः।
— BrSū, 1.4.22

Pre-Vallabha Vedānta Thought

WE have seen that the Brahma Sūtras (BrSū) were called the Vedānta Sūtra, as they dealt with the topics in the Upaniṣads which formed the last part of the Vedic literature, the other previous parts being Samhitā, Brāhmaṇa and Āraṇyakas. In the Upaniṣads, there were two main thought-currents — one affirming the identity of the Brahman, the individual soul and the world, and the other which distinguished between them inter se. Some teachers attempted to reconcile these different views. Bādarāyaṇa was the last author and probably a successful one in synthesizing them. He arranged the different Upaniṣadic views under separate sections or titles and presented them in laconic but intelligible sūtras. As some of the views stated to be those of Bādarāyaṇa were not accepted as siddhānta in the BrSū, the redactor of the present BrSū must be different than Bādarāyaṇa. Bādarāyaṇa, however, deserves the credit of presenting a coherent view of those bygone philosophical debates.

As a background of the philosophical contribution of Vallabhācārya, it is necessary to take a bird's-eye view of the philosophical debate that took place before Vallabhācārya. In this debate, the pattern of thought about the relation of God, man and the world was more important than the designation of the God as Śiva, Viṣṇu, Śakti, etc. Hence, though Vallabhācārya was a Vaiṣṇava, contribution of Vaiṣṇava and non-Vaiṣṇava ācāryas before Vallabhācārya are briefly noted.

Gauḍapāda

teacher, Gauḍapāda. Little historical information about him is available. Though a number of works are attributed to him, the Māṇḍūkya Kārikā is the only work that is accepted as his contribution to Vedānta. Some kārikās from that work are quoted as pūrva-pakṣa by the Buddhist philosopher Bhāvaviveka or Bhavya<sup>1</sup> (circa AD 490-520). It leads us to fix the probable date of Gauḍapāda and that of Śaṅkarācārya.

As Gauḍapāda wrote his kārikās earlier than Bhavya's work, Gauḍapāda's date is automatically confirmed. And also the date of the pupil's (Govinda Yati) pupil, viz., Śaṅkara. A generation is regarded as a period of 30 years. So Śaṅkara lived 60 years after Gauḍapāda in circa AD 550 (AD 490 + 60). I hope scholars will reconsider the erroneous date of Śaṅkara, viz., AD 788. As is well-known, Brāhmaṇism and Buddhism shared the philosophic thoughts of Upaniṣads and used common terms, sometimes with different implications. Hence some scholars like S.N. Dasgupta seem to regard Gauḍapāda a Buddhist, but other scholars like T.M.P. Mahadevan (Gauḍapāda, A Study in Advaita Vedānta, Madras, 1952), S. Roy (Heritage of Śaṅkara, Allahabad, 1968) have shown that Gauḍapāda's Advaita and Nāgārjuna's Advaya are not the same and the apparent similarities in kārikās of Gauḍapāda and Nāgārjuna are deceptive. Lastly the very fact that the Buddhist philosopher Bhavya quotes Gauḍapāda as pūrva-pakṣa is enough to show that he (Gauḍapāda) is not a Buddhist. Gauḍapāda is credited to have written a number of works such as the commentary on Sāṃkhya Kārikās, but the only authentic work generally accepted as such is his Māṇḍūkya Kārikās.

This work is divided into four parts or sections:

1. Āgama: This explains the text of the Māṇḍūkya Upaniṣad. He shows that his views have the sanction of the Śruti and are reinforced by reason.
2. Vaitathya: It shows the phenomenal nature of the world.
3. This establishes the Advaita theory.
4. Alāte-Śānti (Extinguishing the circle of a fire-brand).

When a torch or a stick burning at the end is whirled in a circle, it gives the illusion of a circle of fire, so is the multiplicity of the world and proves the Advaitic position about the reality of the Soul.

To state briefly:

Gauḍapāda holds:

- (1) The doctrine of Ajāti

Nothing comes into being (Māṇḍūkya Kārikā, IV-19)

- (2) All the appearances (dharmas) are like the Vacuous sky (gaganopama)

- (3) Duality is distinction imposed on the non-dual (advaita) by māyā.

Whatever has a beginning has an end, hence unreal. The Brahman is kūṭastha (unchanging). Causality is a false notion. Things are produced apparently and not in reality.

Gauḍapāda, the staunch exponent of the Advaita Vedānta says that the Advaita Vedānta (Asparśa Yoga) is pleasing to all and hostile to none.<sup>2</sup>

Śaṅkara

Though there is considerable similarity in the views of the Śaiva and Vaiṣṇava Monists, Śaiva and Vaiṣṇava Dualists, etc., they did not inter-borrow as it is the practice in India to quote only from one's own pūrva sūris (preceding authors) and NOT from those from the other alien schools. Even in telling a common narrative such as the story of Rāma, Śvetāmbara Jain authors mention or refer to their pūrva sūris and not to Digambara writers and vice-versa.

Like Śaiva philosophers, Śaṅkara probed mainly problems relating to the following:

- (i) The Ultimate Reality
- (ii) The Individual Soul
- (iii) The Phenomenal World

THE ULTIMATE REALITY

According to Śaṅkara, the Brahman is the Ultimate Reality (brahma satyam). It is one, non-dual. It is sat (the Reality, existence), cit (pure consciousness) and ānanda (bliss). Sat-cit-ānanda constitute the very nature of the Brahman and not its qualities. The Brahman is both immanent and transcendent to the phenomenal world. Hence, Upaniṣads hold that the Absolute can be described by the words: Not this', 'Not that' (neti, neti) and by the negatively worded epithets nirguṇa, nirākāra, etc. Some ācāryas interpret the first as devoid of the qualities of prakṛti, viz., sattva, rajas, tamas; some, as devoid of unacceptable qualities (heya-guṇas). Some raise objection to the term nirākāra as saints or mystics visualize in their meditation innumerable forms of the Lord. Does nirākāra mean 'too innumerable to be counted or described'? About the Brahman, Śaṅkara adopts the Upaniṣadic view that one teaches it without speaking (avacanena eva anubhavan uvāca) as the Brahman is not only incomprehensible but also indescribable. The Brāhmanical Avadhūta Gītā states that the Brahman is beyond both Dvaita and Advaita.<sup>3</sup> The great Buddhist teacher Nāgārjuna seems to have reached to a similar conclusion about the nature of reality (see the Mādhyamaka Kārikās quoted in the Notes).<sup>4</sup>

The Date

As I have shown above, that due to Gauḍapāda's precedence in time, to the Buddhist philosopher Bhavya or Bhāvaviveka (AD 490-520), Śaṅkara should be located in the sixth century AD and not in the eighth century (AD 788) as is presumed by modern scholars.

After Gauḍapāda, Śaṅkara is the earliest Vaiṣṇava scholar who set the Monist (Advaita) school on solid foundations. I call Śaṅkara a Vaiṣṇava as his spiritual genealogy (guru-paramparā) starts from Viṣṇu.

There is another view which regards a person Vaiṣṇava who considers Viṣṇu as the Supreme Reality and a Śaiva who regards Śiva as the highest reality. As Viṣṇu and Śiva are the names of the same Supreme Reality, the para-Brahman, there is no need to emphasize differences such as Śaiva and Vaisnava.

It is interesting to note that all great Vaiṣṇava teachers — Śaṅkara, Rāmānuja, Madhva, Vallabha hail from, the Dravidian-speaking south. Like Śaivite teachers, these Vaiṣṇava teachers have established their particular philosophical school (e.g., Monism, Dualism, etc.) while probing the main problems about the nature, relations, etc., of (i) the Ultimate Reality, (ii) The individual soul, (iii) The phenomenal world.

Śaṅkara's views about the nature, etc., of the Ultimate Reality are noted above.

THE INDIVIDUAL SOUL

About 'Individual Soul', Śaṅkara is firmly of the opinion that the individual soul (jīva) is the Brahman and is not different from it.<sup>5</sup>

THE PHENOMENAL WORLD

About the phenomenal world, Śaṅkara uses two terms: (i) Māyā and (ii) Vivarta. I am only stating Śaṅkara's views. Śaṅkara never calls himself māyā-vādin. He calls himself aupaniṣada and his doctrine as aupaniṣada darśana Vide His Bhāṣya on BrSū, II.2.10 and II.1.9

Māyā<sup>6</sup>

In Śaṅkara's writings, the term māyā denotes the following:

- (1) The phenomenal character of the world.
- (2) The incomprehensibility of the relation between the Ultimate Reality (Brahman) and the world of Plurality.
- (3) The Brahman as the cause of the world as it (world) rests on the Brahman.
- (4) The Principle which is assumed to account for the appearance of the Brahman as the world.
- (5) If the concept of the empirical world is logically analysed, one arrives at the concept of Īśvara who has the power of self-expression. This power or Energy is called māyā.

Śaṅkara's concepts of māyā may be compared with the māyā concept of the Buddhist philosopher Nāgārjuna. He regards the concepts of origination, existence and annihilation of the nature of māyā, dreams or fairy castles in the heaven.<sup>7</sup>

As Śaṅkara is a refuter of Nāgārjuna's sūnyavāda, he should not be accused as a borrower from Nāgārjuna.

Śaivas had no need for such a complicated theory, as Para-Śiva (the Supreme Reality) has powers of knowledge (prakāśa) and Creativity (vimarśa). Śiva can create, maintain and destroy anything by his sheer Will Power without any material (upādāna) and instrument — a doctrine which reminds us of Vallabhācārya's concept of Para-Brahman.

Vivarta

Vivarta is 'apparent modification', explains Svāmī Vireśvarānanda in his introduction to Brahma Sūtra-Śrībhāṣya (pp. lxxiv or 74):

There is a view current that Vedānta Sūtras propound a theistic philosophy whatever be the nature of it and never Śaṅkara's Monism.

This view is not justified due to the fact that very many Brahma Sūtras . . . clearly point to vivarta-vāda

In the first sūtra (BrSū, 1.1.1) knowledge is intuitive knowledge attained through hearing (śravaṇa), reasoning (manana) and meditation (nididhyāsana) that leads to such knowledge which destroys the ignorance about Brahman, resulting in release (from saṁsāra). So, importance given to bhakti and grace by theistic commentators does not seem to be justified. Many sūtras clearly point to vivarta-vāda (e.g., BrSū, 1.4.23, II.1.14.20, II.3.50, III.2.18). The last two show that the author of BrSū must have had vivarta-vāda (apparent modification) and not pariṇāma-vāda (actual modification) in view.

The fact is, Upaniṣads do not teach any particular doctrine. The doctrines expressed (as their contexts show) are for different levels.

In the introduction to BrSū Radhakrishnan says:

Even according to Śaṅkara The World is not non-existent. Brahman with its māyā power is the cause of the world. The world has a relative empirical existence.

Śaṅkara, the theist, believes in personal God and describes the different attributes of the deity, be it Viṣṇu, Śiva or Śakti. His stotras, the outpouring of the heart of an ardent devotee, are recited everyday by many people. Acceptance of saguṇa or apara Brahman is the ground reality. The aspirants are taken step by step to the Ultimate truth from Dualism to qualified Monism and finally to Monism where they realize their identity with the Brahman.

Vallabhācārya's View

Vallabhācārya's views regarding the Supreme Reality Kṛṣṇa, the individual soul and the world are discussed in the following chapters in details, it will not be out of place to show the differences between Śaṅkara and Vallabha as both of them are bracketed as Monists. According to Vallabhācārya:

1. The Brahman is attributeless and yet possess all non-material (or prakaṭa) auspicious qualities.
2. In the Brahman all contradictions are resolved (paraspara-viruddha-guṇāśraya).
3. It is essentially sat (Existence), cit (Consciousness) and ānanda (Bliss) and has no connection with māyā.
4. The world is neither illusory nor is different from the Brahmā. The relation between the Brahmā and the world is one of identity (sarvam khalu idam brahma).
5. Both sentient and insentient beings are Brahman in essence but in the sentient, Bliss aspect of the Brahman is withheld and in the non-sentient, knowledge or consciousness and bliss are withheld. When these aspects which are withheld appear in them, they become one with the Brahman. It is especially the bliss-aspect by gaining which they become identical with the Brahmā.

Bhāskara (AD 1000)

Bhāskara strongly refutes Śaṅkara's māyā-vāda. He asserts that the māyā-vāda is the brain-child of Śaṅkara and has no basis in the Śruti.

Those who adopt māyā-vāda are Buddhists<sup>8</sup> — a baseless criticism as shown in the previous section. The Brahman is the Supreme Reality. It is both material and efficient cause of the Universe. The Brahman has two forms.<sup>9</sup>

- (i) Kāraṇa rūpa (Causal) and
- (ii) Kārya rūpa (the Effect)

The causal form of the Brahman is the original, while the effect form is due to upādhis (limiting adjuncts) and is, therefore, adventitious (āgantuka) yet real. The difference between the two is that the Brahman as the cause, is eternal forever, while the effect — Brahman is real but temporary (anitya). In the causal state the Brahman and the world are identical but in the effect stage, the Brahman and the Universe are different.

The Brahman is Pure Being (sat-lakṣaṇa), Pure Knowledge, omniscient, omnipotent. The Brahman is the essence of the Universe but not vice-versa.

Bhāskara rejects the Pāñcarātra theory of four vyūhas. He regards Upavarṣācārya as the founder of the school (saṃpradāya — pravartaka) and advises the performance of duties laid down in the Pūrva-Mīmāṃsā necessary before the study of the BrSū. Mere knowledge of scriptures is not enough for mukti. He advocates 'Coordination of karma and Knowledge' (karma-jñāna-samuccaya). He is propagator of bhedābheda and as such is a follower of Āśmarathya.

Rāmānuja (AD 1017-1127)

Rāmānuja is the chief exponent of Viśiṣṭādvaita philosophy. Radhakrishnan points out that 'qualified non-dualism' is not the correct rendering of the term viśiṣṭādvaita. It is viśiṣṭasya advaita, the non-dualism of the differences. It holds the unity of the conscious (cit) and the non-conscious, unintelligent (acit) with and in God whose body they constitute.

Radhakrishnan believes that the word brahma-sūtra in the Bhagavad Gītā (13-4)<sup>10</sup> supports the view that Bādarāyaṇa seems to be a theist rather than an absolutist.<sup>11</sup>

Rāmānuja's magnum opus is his monumental commentary Śrī Bhāṣya on the BrSū. His philosophy is influenced by the Bhāgavata doctrine, the bhakti cult of Alwārs (Vaiṣṇavaite Tamil saints). He synthesizes the old Alwār prabandhas with the theistic portion of old Upaniṣads, the Bhāgavata, the Pāñcarātra Āgamas as approved by BrSū, 2.2.41 and 42.

According to Rāmānuja, the Supreme Reality, the all-embracing Being called the Brahman is the mightiest Self. He is free from impurities and is endowed with auspicious qualities. He is omniscient and merciful. He is not nirviśeṣa (attributesless) as believed by Śāṅkara, Rāmānuja regards the Brahman, Īśvara, Nārāyaṇa and Viṣṇu identical. He postulates the Brahman qualified by the world of sentient (cit) and non-sentient (acit) as its body under all conditions, viz., kāraṇa and kārya (causal and an effect). Svāmī Vīreśvarānanda sums up the substance of the Śrī Bhāṣya as follows:

The substance of the Śrī Bhāṣya may be stated in four synoptic propositions:

- (1) It is a reasoned and critical reconstruction of the philosophy of Upaniṣads with due appropriation of other sources of knowledge such as perception and inference and the supplementary scriptures.
- (2) The reconstruction presents Ultimate Reality, Brahman, the Supreme spirit, as the transcendent repository of all perfections and as holding as its own embodiment the totality of finite existence, sentient and insentient.
- (3) The pathway to the final good of life is the blissful communion with the Brahman by way of devout and loving contemplation named bhakti, facilitated by a life of virtue and founded on assumed philosophical understanding.
- (4) The end attained through that means is the eternal experience of Brahman, with all the plenitude and eternity which only that experience can bring to the individual personality. It is the Supreme ecstasy of life in God.<sup>12</sup>

The importance of the Śrī Bhāṣya lies in the amplitude of its substantiation of these fundamentals.

The following special concepts of Rāmānuja are worth noting:

- (1) Rāmānuja interprets the famous mahā-vākya 'tat tvam asi' (That thou art) as oneness (with Brahman) without losing the distinctive characteristics denoted by the two words — that and thou.
- (2) In the mokṣa stage, the soul enjoys its individuality. He participates in the qualities of Īśvara except the creation and control of the world. Vedānta Desika, however, thinks mukti (mokṣa) is servitude to God.
- (3) The way of mokṣa is bhakti and prapatti (complete surrender to the will of God).

Rāmānuja had such a broad outlook that he admitted into the Vaiṣṇava fold Jains, Buddhists, śūdras and even untouchables.<sup>13</sup> In a way Rāmānuja was a source of inspiration to later saints like Rāmānanda, Kabīr and others.

Madhva (AD 1238)

Next to Rāmānuja, Madhva made an important contribution to Indian philosophy — the establishment of Dualism or rather Dualistic Pluralism. Madhva deserves special attention as Vallabhācārya's teachers were followers of Madhva. Madhva refuted Śāṅkara's non-dualism (Advaita) and established the reality of the Personal God, Plurality of the world and the difference between individual souls and the Brahman. The Brahman is the only independent existence and Knowledge in essence. It is called 'indescribable' or 'unknowable' as it cannot be fully described or known. The Brahman is not associated with guṇas (sattva, rajas and tamas) of prakṛti and is hence called nirguṇa (quality-less).

Though Brahmā's infinite personality is beyond our comprehension, for His devotees He manifests Himself in finite form which is not material. Matter (prakṛti) is real and eternal but dependent on the Brahman. It undergoes modifications at the Will of the Brahman which is only an efficient cause. The Brahman is sentient and cannot be the creator of an insentient world.

Like other schools of Indian Philosophy, Madhva holds that the soul's are eternal (not created by the Brahman). They depend on the Lord who guides them to mokṣa — a positive blissful stage in which the soul does not lose his independent individuality. Madhva advocates the semitic doctrine of eternal hell to the wicked.<sup>14</sup>

In a period dominated by great advocates of Śaṅkara's theory of non-dualism, the credit of repudiating that doctrine, establishment of the reality of a Personal God, of Plurality of the world and difference between the Brahman and the souls, goes to Madhva (though he was an ascetic of Śaṅkara school) and to his followers like Jayatīrtha.

There have been great teachers like Yādava Prakāśa, Niṁbārka and others before Vallabha. It will, however, require a separate book to trace in full the evolution of philosophical thought before Vallabha. As this is a small compendium of Vallabhācārya's Brahma-Vāda, I have limited myself to the main tenets of four prominent teachers, viz., Śaṅkara, Bhāskara, Rāmānuja and Madhva. These teachers are regarded as the most prominent exponents (though not founders) of the main schools of Veda-based Indian Philosophy, viz., Monism (advaita), difference-cum-non-difference (bhedābheda), Qualified Monism (viśiṣṭādvaita) and Dualism or Pluralistic Dualism (dvaita).

It is on such a background that Vallabhācārya established his theory of Śudhādvaita or Brahma-vāda. What follows is a non-technical popular presentation of Vallabhācārya's thought on the nature of the Supreme Reality, Man and the World and not a critique of his philosophy. I may, however, notice two Śaiva teachers.

Śrīkaṇṭha (circa AD 1300)

Śrīkaṇṭha is a Śaiva viśiṣṭādvaitin. He was probably a contemporary of Rāmānuja, though his commentator Appaya Dīkṣit suggests that Rāmānuja follows Śrīkaṇṭha. He calls his commentary on the BrSū as Brahma-Mīmāṃsā Bhāṣya or Aupaniṣadi Mīmāṃsā, though he has freely used Āgamas as authoritative texts along with Śruti. Though mainly a supporter of Viśiṣṭādvaita doctrine, he tilts to Advaita in interpreting some sūtras (see G.V. Tagare — Śaiva Darśana, pp. 162-64) and particularly to Kāśmīr Śaivism.

God does not transform himself into the world but it is His Śakti which manifests herself as the world. He is both Knowledge and Knower. His cit śakti consists of knowledge (jñāna), volition (icchā) and action (kriyā). His acit-śakti consists of elements like earth, water, etc., the cit and acit, — Non-difference between the Brahman and Prapañca means mutual interdependence and not identity. The Universe is Brahma-pariṇāma, i.e. transfiguration of His cit-śakti.

The soul is an eternal and real substance, doer, an enjoyer, an active agent, atomic in size. God only helps the realization of each one's wishes. He is neither cruel nor partial.

Meditation of the Lord in his own nature leads to liberation directly and immediately.

Mokṣa: The grace of the Lord is the essential prerequisite for mokṣa. The freed souls are omniscient, independent, similar to the Lord but not identical with Him, for the soul is atomic and the Lord is all-pervading. Liberation is after death. There is no jīvan-mukti according to Śrīkaṇṭha. The influence of Kāśmīr Śaivism is strong on Śrīkaṇṭha.

Śrīpati Paṇḍit (AD 1500?)

Śrīpati Paṇḍit, an Āndhra brāhmaṇa from Vijayavāḍā wrote a commentary on the BrSū from difference-cum-non-difference (dvaitādvaita) point of view. As a Śaiva, he admitted the authority of twenty-eight Śaiva Āgamas but not of Tāntric texts like Rāmānuja. He accepts unity in duality on the analogy of a serpent and its coils. Para-Śiva or the Brahman is the primary cause of everything and as such the reality of the world (BrSā, II.22.28). This sūtra maintains the existence of external objects due to their perception. This repudiates the māyā doctrine which holds all objects illusory and non-existent. He explains that as Śiva is their upādāna kāraṇa, they are not mithyā (illusory)

(I.1.1). He repudiates Śaṅkara's theory of world appearances and formless Brahman as unworthy of acceptance (I.1.20).

The soul is beginningless, atom-like, bound down by māyā but has the freedom to act and realise Śiva.

Mokṣa

So long a soul is fettered by māyā, there is Dvaita (Duality or difference) between the soul and the Brahman, the freed soul is Śiva-like in form (sīva-sārūpya), omniscient but retains his individuality. Jīva and Brahman are different from each other but in the progressive six stages — ṣaṭ-sthala — jīva attains Brahmahood with the grace of God and guru. On the analogy of bhramara-kiṭa-nyāya, the individual soul attains the nature of Śiva by worship and meditation.

Śrīpati's work forms a solid foundation to the Vira-Śaiva Sect.

We may sum up the names of the important pre-Vallabha teachers and their doctrines.

Author	Doctrine
1. Śaṅkara (circa AD 700)	Kevalādvaita
2. Bhāskara (AD 1000)	Bhedābheda
3. Rāmānuja (AD 1017-1127)	Viśiṣṭādvaita
4. Madhva (c.1238)	Dvaita
5. Śrīkaṇṭha (c.1300)	Śaiva Viśiṣṭādvaita
6. Śrīpati Paṇḍit (c.1500)	Dvaitādvaita

Notes

1. Hakuji quoted by Hajime Nakamura in A History of Early Vedantic Philosophy, p. 183.
2. अस्पर्श-योगो वै नाम सर्व-सत्त्व-सुखो हि सः। अविवादो, अनिरुद्धश्च देशिनस्तं नमाम्यहम्॥

— गौडपाद, माण्डुक्य-कारिका

3. अद्वैतं केचिदिच्छन्ति, द्वैतामिच्छन्ति चापरे।
समं तत्त्वं न विन्दन्ति द्वैताद्वैत-विवर्जितम् ॥ *
4. अनिरोधम् अनुत्पादम्, अनुच्छेदम्, अशाश्वतम्।
अनेकार्थम्, अनानार्थम्, अनागमम्, अनिर्गमम् ॥
न सन्, नासन्, न सदसन्, न चापि उभयात्मिकम्।
चतुष्कोटि-विनिर्मुक्तं तत्त्वं माध्यमिका विदुः ॥
5. जीवो ब्रह्मैव नापरः।
6. Adapted from History of Indian Philosophy: Eastern and Western, Vol. I, pp. 279 ff.
7. यथा माया यथा स्वप्नो गन्धर्व-नगरं यथा। तथोत्पादास्तथास्थानं तथा भङ्गा उदाहृताः ॥
— माध्यमक कारिका, 7.34
8. विच्छिन्नमूलं महायानिक-बौद्ध-गाथितं मायावादं व्यावर्णयन् ते लोकान् व्यामोहयन्ति।
— Bhāskara on BrSū, 1.4.25
9. तत् (= ब्रह्मन्) कारणात्मना कार्यात्मना च द्विरूपेण अवस्थितम्।
— Bhāskara — BrSū, 1.1.4
10. ब्रह्मसूत्रपदेष्वैव हेतुमद्भिः सुनिश्चितैः।
— BG, 13.4
11. S. Radhaksishnan, Brahmasūtra, Intro., p. 46.
12. Brahma Sūtras — Śrī Bhāṣya by Svāmi Vireśvaranānda and Svāmi Ādidevānanda (Advaita Ashram, Calcutta), pp. xxv-xxvi.
13. S. Radhakrishnan, Brahma Sūtra, Intro., p. 57.
14. Ibid., p. 65 fn. 1 quotes from Madhva's Mahābhārata-Tātparyā-nirṇaya.
त्रिविधा जीवसङ्घास्तु देव-मानुष-दानवाः।
तत्र देवा मुक्तियोग्या मानुषेषूत्तम-स्तथा ॥
मध्यमा मानुषा एते सूतियोग्यास्तदैव हि।
अधमा निरयायैव दानवास्तु तपोलयाः ॥

The Concept of the Deity

UNTIL now we have seen the main stages in the evolution of Indian thought with reference to the Deity, Man and the World. It was mainly with reference to the Upaniṣadic concepts to which we limited ourselves with occasional references to non-Vedic systems of thought. Our main object is to understand the elements of Brahma-Vāda as taught by the great Ācārya Vallabha.

The term Brahma-Vāda originally meant 'religious discussion' (with special reference to Vedic literature, specifically the Vedānta or the Upaniṣads). Later on it came to mean 'Discussion on the Brahman' (as the Brahman was the most important part of Upaniṣadic discussions). Śaṅkara uses it as a technical term to mean the philosophical position of his school. In his commentary, he calls his school Aupaniṣada Darśana (BrSū, 2.2.10) and his doctrine Vedānta-Vāda (BrSū, 1.4.22) but never māyā-vāda. It was his earliest critic, Bhāskara, exponent of 'difference-cum-non-difference' (bhedābheda-vāda) who, probably as an opponent, called Śaṅkara a māyā-vādin (Com. on BrSū, 2.1.14, 4.4.14). As H. Jacobi points out: the māyā-vāda concept recognises the reality of the Brahman, the rest is completely phantasmagoric and false (JAOS, 1913, p. 52). But as Paul Deussen points out: "Śaṅkara maintained the theory of the empirical reality of the external world" (The System of the Vedānta, p. 55, n.31, pp 241-44). Due to similarity between some views in Śaṅkara's Vedānta and in the Mahāyāna Buddhism, Bhāskara, commenting upon BrSū, 2.2.29, calls māyā-vādins as 'dependent on Buddhism' (Baudhha-matānuvādinō māyāvādinah).

But to distinguish Vallabhācārya's Advaitic views from those of Śaṅkara, we designate his doctrine as Śuddhādvaita. The term means, 'Advaita uncontaminated by māyā.' As Ācārya Giridhara defines it:*

It (the doctrine of Śuddhādvaita) is called Pure, unsoiled with any contact with māyā. The Brahman which is a cause as well as an effect in form (kārya-kāraṇa-rūpa) is pure and has no relation with māyā.

Śuddhādvaita Mārtaṇḍa, VV 27-28

As stated in Vallabhācārya's biographical sketch, Vallabhācārya, the promulgator of the Śuddhādvaita school of philosophy, proclaimed himself as a follower of Viṣṇusvāmī of Kāncī. It is said that Viṣṇusvāmī belonged to the Rudra School of Vaiṣṇavism and was a Dualist. He is credited to have written bhāṣyas on Prasthāna Trayī, but nothing except seven verses attributed to him have come down to us (vide Appendix II). But they do not constitute an adequate basis for the great edifice of Śuddhādvaita philosophy as expounded by Vallabhācārya.

Viṣṇusvāmī seems to be a historical person, as he is mentioned by Nābhādāsa (himself a southerner) in the Bhaktmālā (chappayya 48). The work was written in Samvat 1592 (Hindi Śahitya Kośa, part II, ed. by Dhirendra Varmā, Samvat 2020). Varmā records a hearsay information making Jñānadeva, Trilochana and Vallabha as followers of Viṣṇusvāmī.

The sacred mantra communicated by Viṣṇusvāmī for japa and meditation is Gopāla Mantra. The mantras of puṣṭi-mārga, promulgated by Vallabhācārya are:

(1) Kṛṣṇa tavāsmi.

Oh Kṛṣṇa, I am yours (You are my Master)

(2) Śrīkṛṣṇaḥ śaraṇam mama.

Kṛṣṇa is my resort or shelter.<sup>1</sup>

*भाषासम्बन्धरहितं शुद्धमित्युच्यते बुधेः ।

कार्य-कारण-रूपं हि शुद्धं ब्रह्म, न मायिकम् ॥

— गिरिधर in शुद्धाद्वैतमार्तण्ड, VV 27-28

Both Viṣṇusvāmī and Vallabhācārya were ardent devotees of Kṛṣṇa. Vallabhācārya, however, inherited it from his family tradition.

Pramāṇas (Valid means of Knowledge)

Philosophy is a search for true knowledge. True knowledge can be acquired through valid means of arriving at the truth in reality. They use the term pramā for 'true knowledge' and pramāṇa for 'valid means of getting true knowledge'. All schools of Indian Philosophy, Vedic and non-Vedic have adopted these terms.

The Buddhists regard pramāṇas as 'valid avenues of knowledge that are not at variance with the Real'. Dharmakīrti (c. AD 635) in his Pramāṇa-Vārttika regards pramāṇas as 'the recognition of the uncognised'. According to Nyāya-Vaiśeṣikas, pramāṇa is 'the unfailing source of true knowledge'.

Number of Pramāṇas

Different schools of Indian Philosophy have adopted different number of pramāṇas from one, viz., pratyakṣa (Perception) recognised by Cārvākas upto six pramāṇas accepted by the Bhaṭṭa school of Mīmāṃsakas. In between we have Vaiśeṣikas who recognise only two, viz., pratyakṣa (perception) and anumāna (Inference). Sāṅkhyas add the third pramāṇa, viz., śabda (Testimony). Naiyāyikas recognise four pramāṇas, viz., (1) pratyakṣa (Perception), (2) anumāna (Inference), (3) upamāna (Comparison or Analogy), (4) śabda (Testimony).

Prābhākara (Bhaṭṭa) Mīmāṃsakas add arthāpatti (Initial Doubt) as the fifth pramāṇa, while the other Mīmāṃsā school, viz., that of Kumārila Bhaṭṭa, adds (anupalabdhi) as the sixth pramāṇa. In Arthāpatti there must be an initial doubt which is to be resolved later Anupalabdhi is non-perception and it is recognised to explain the apprehension of abhāva (non-existence). Thus it is an instrument to know what does not exist.

Though the multiplicity of pramāṇas appears complex, we can reduce these six pramāṇas into three: (1) pratyakṣa should include anupalabdhi as it is only the absence of pratyakṣa (Perception), (2) anumāna accommodates upamāna and arthāpatti which are varieties of inference, (3) śabda.

By the way, I may point out that Mahāprabhu Caitanya, in his Daśa-Mūla-Śloka remarks that Logic has no competence in determining the Ultimate Reality. The Vedas (śruti), as the record of higher mystical experience of sages, are the true guide (to comprehend Reality).

Vallabhācārya's Views

Vallabhācārya recognises the following four pramāṇas: (1) pratyakṣa (perception), (2) anumāna (Inference), (3) aitihya (Tradition), (4) śruti — the corpus of Vedic literature including Samhitās, Brāhmaṇas Āraṇyakas and Upaniṣads.

Vallabhācārya specifically emphasizes Śruti (Vedas) as THE only pramāṇa as they constitute the supernatural, in matters of supernatural subjects, self-evident, self-proved (svataḥ-siddha pramāṇa)<sup>1</sup> (see TDN, 1.7).

In Śrutis, Samhitā, Brāhmaṇa and Āraṇyaka comprise the ritualistic section (karma-kāṇḍa), while Upaniṣads (the older strata) constitute the philosophical section (jñāna-kāṇḍa). As these are *dharma*s (Attributes) of Paramātman, these two are in a way one and the same. These two kāṇḍas being complementary to each other are regarded as identical.<sup>2</sup> According to Vallabhācārya, the authoritative texts under śabda are the Bhagavad Gītā (BG) the Brahma Sūtras (BrSā) and the Bhāgavata Purāṇa (BhP) in general.<sup>3</sup>

In the case of BhP, Vallabhācārya regards that only the meditational part (samādhi bhāṣā) of Vyāsa, should be regarded as authoritative. While explaining what he means by samādhi bhāṣā, Vallabhācārya excludes the following portion from the BhP as unauthoritative.

- (1) Ordinary description or narrative, e.g.

atha uṣasi upavṛttāyām

When it dawned — BhP, X.70.1

- (2) Quotations or what is heard from others:

śrutam dvaipāyana-mukhāt

Heard from the mouth (i.e. oral speech) of Dvaipāyana

Thus by samādhi bhāṣā of Vyāsa, Vallabhācārya means what Vyāsa expressed after experiencing it while in a trance (samādhi)<sup>4</sup> or philosophical verses.

The words caiva added after Vyāsa-Sūtrāṇi, i.e. Brahma Sūtra in TDN, 1.7 imply the Pūrva-Mīmāṃsā sāstra of Jaimini. Vallabhācārya is credited to have written a commentary on those sūtras.

Traditionally, logic or reasoning was given a secondary place in search of spiritual reality. This (spiritual) knowledge cannot be obtained by Logic or reasoning (tarka),<sup>5</sup> declares the Kaṭha Upaniṣad (II.7). BrSū (2.1.11) regards tarka as of 'ill-foundation' (a-pratiṣṭhāna). In explaining the reason for tarka being declared 'unfounded', Rāmānuja says, "Theories based on human reasoning are liable to be upset or modified by people more skilled in reasoning (as found in the disputation of other sects).<sup>6</sup> Vallabhācārya endorses the same view.<sup>7</sup>

Gradation of Pramānas

Out of pramānas recognised by Vallabhācārya, namely the Vedas, the Bhagavad Gītā, the Brahma Sūtras and the Bhāgavata Purāna, the consecutively latter pramāna removes doubts that have remained in spite of the previous pramāna.<sup>8</sup> Whatever does not conform to the consensus of these (even if it be the Manusmṛiti) is not a pramāna<sup>9</sup> in the matter of the subjects dealt in the Śāstrārtha Prakaraṇa (of TDN) and not in the matter of Varaṇāśramācāra-lakṣaṇa-dharma (Sarvanirṇaya Prakaraṇa of TDN).

Prameya: The Brahman: Kṛṣṇa

The Ultimate Reality to be ascertained by the pramānas is the Para Brahman or Śrī Kṛṣṇa, as he devoutly designates it. Kṛṣṇa was the hereditary deity in his family. Kṛṣṇa is called the Brahman in the Vedānta. Paramātmā in Smṛtis and Bhagavān in the BhP.<sup>10</sup> The Karma-Kāṇḍa, describes Him as yajña (sacrifice); the Jñāna-Kāṇḍa (Vedānta) describes Him as the Brahman, endowed with the special powers of Knowledge, while the Bhāgavata describes Him as Avatārin<sup>11</sup> i.e. one who takes all incarnations. Vallabhācārya describes Kṛṣṇa as the supreme Brahman characterised by sat (existence), cit (consciousness) and ānanda (Bliss) vide Siddhānta-muktāvali.<sup>12</sup>

The Concept of the Brahman

Though the grammatical gender of the vocable Brahman is neuter, I use He to designate Him, as Vallabhācārya regarded Kṛṣṇa as another name for the Brahman.

As noted above, Kṛṣṇa or the Brahman is the Supreme Reality. He is one and only one without a second. He is Existence (sat), Consciousness (cit) and Bliss (ānanda). He is the material and instrumental cause in the creation of the World. By His sheer will, He creates and maintains the world and by His sheer will, He withdraws it in Him (pralaya). Here one is reminded of a similar concept about Parama Śiva and his vimarśa power. Vallabhācārya's concept about the Brahman may be better summarised by a quotation from BhP, 10.8.54 wherein sage Śuka addresses Kṛṣṇa:

You are the place (substratum), the agent and the instrument (i.e. the instrumental cause) of the Universe. You are the source of the Universe, its object or purpose, whenever and whatever form it assumes, is yourself. As and when this Universe evolves, all the causes thereof including time and manner, are the Almighty Lord yourself who controls both prakṛti (to be enjoyed, the object of enjoyment) and puruṣa (the enjoyer) and transcends them both.<sup>13</sup>

(BhP, 10.85.4)

He is both the formless and endowed with a form.<sup>14</sup> He is both saguna (possessor of attributes) and nirguna (attributeless or devoid of undesirable qualities). He is a repository of contradictory qualities or attributes (viruddha-guṇāśrayatva). His powers and attributes are natural, that is, non-different from Him, as there is no difference or distinction between a quality or attribute (dharma) and the possessor of that dharma or attribute (i.e. dharmin). Here one is reminded of the fundamental doctrine of Kāśmīr Śaivas who regard that there is no difference between śakti (power) and the possessor of power (śaktimat). They say:

śakti-śaktimatar abhedaḥ

Thus Brahman Himself is Bliss, Consciousness and Existence incarnate.

The Brahma-Vāda emphasises the one-ness of jaḍa, jīva and antaryāmin. As contrasted with Rāmānujan, Vallabhācārya does not condemn jaḍa to remain so for ever. He says that in jaḍa (matter, material objects) there is only sat (the quality of Existence), in jīva (the animates) there are (the qualities) of sat (existence) and cit (consciousness) and in the antaryāmin there are sat, cit and ānanda (Bliss). If the quality of cit is infused or developed in jaḍa, he becomes animate and with the infusion or development of Bliss, they become anatyāmin or ānandākāras.

Here Śaṅkara differs. He holds that the Brahman is nirguṇa and nirākāra (attributeless and formless). The theory may have proposed to avoid contradiction in the qualities or forms of the Brahman. But Vallabhācārya's theory of accomodation of contradictory qualities or attributes (paraspara-virudha-dharmāśrayatva) in the Brahman reconciles the probable objection by accepting this special characteristic of the Brahman.

There is one fundamental difference in the Brahman concept of Śaṅkara and Vallabha. Śaṅkara believes that the Brahman by itself is inactive. It cannot create the world by itself alone. It is only in association with avidyā that the creation of the Universe takes place. In other words avidyā becomes the real creator and the recognition of avidyā as a creator contradicts the non-duality (a-dvaita-tva) of the Brahman. The recognition of avidyā as the creator of the world negates the reality of the world. Vallabhācārya, however, regards the Brahman as the material and instrumental cause of the Universe and as the Brahman is real, the world, His creation is real. He modifies or transforms Himself in various things or forms. Hence, His non-duality.

Śaṅkara firmly states that the Brahman is the reality while the world is illusion.

brahma satyam, jagan mithyā

(The word mithyā is properly untranslatable)

Rāmānuja's concept of God's person consisting of cit (conscious) and acit (non-Conscious) parts, consigns jaḍa to eternal jaḍatva. Vallabhācārya, however, thinks that the infusion of cit and ānanda can lift jaḍa to the highest stage.

Madhvācārya is a Dualist or rather Pluralist. To him the Brahman is prameya, but there is difference between the Brahman, the souls (all different inter se) and the world. The Brahman is the instrumental cause while prakṛti is the material cause of the world. The Brahman is endowed with attributes (sa-dharmaka) and non-accommodative of contradictory attributes.

Vallabhācārya's doctrine of the special quality of accommodation of contradictory attributes enables him to reconcile contradictory statements in Śrutis such as 'the Brahman is niner than the minutest and greater than the greatest'. (Kaṭha Upaniṣad, 1.2.20) 'He is devoid of hands and feet but He runs quickly. He sees without eyes and hears without ears'. (Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad 3.19)

The creation of the world is due to His volition of Fundamental Will. He Willed: 'I am alone: Let me be many'. And He manifested Himself as jīva and jagat, without undergoing any change in Himself, as in the case of gold and ornaments. It is called a'-vikṛta-pariṇāma-vāda. The creation is looked upon as His sport (līlā).

As to the relation between the Lord and the created world, Vallabhācārya says that both are non-different (ananya) as the effect (kārya — created world) is included in the cause (kāraṇa — the Brahman) and there is no Mithyātva (illusoriness). He quotes Chāndogya Upaniṣad, 6.1.4. (vācārambhaṇam . . . mṛttikā ityeya satyam).<sup>15</sup> This is called satkārya-vada.

Impartiality of God

If the Lord has created the world, He should be impartial to all. But we find some persons are miserable, while some others are happy. The facile explanation is that God dispenses weal and woe as per good and bad deeds of people. If so, God is not the Almighty. The Lord set all the maryādās (limitations) of what is good or evil and willed that souls should be so dealt with. But as per BrSū, 3.2.28, the soul may do whatever actions he likes, the Lord decides the result of those. It is especially so in the case of bhaktas (devotees) that their sins get already destroyed as per Lord's will.<sup>16</sup> Viṭṭhalanātha in Vidvan-maṇḍala (p. 164) says that God created the world as a sport and hence the variety

(of some souls being happy and some others miserable). One is reminded here of Abhinavagupta who says that it is the sport of Lord Śiva to bind down souls and then to release them (Tantrāloka, 8.32).<sup>17</sup> One more explanation is that as souls, laws, karmans and their fruits are created by God and are all forms of the Lord, the charge of Lord's partiality and cruelty is baseless.<sup>18</sup>

Modern minds do not accept this explanation.

The Doctrine of Grace

The doctrine that Liberation from saṃsāra depends on the Grace of the Lord and not on human efforts, is held both by Vaiṣṇavas and Śaivas. Anugraha (conferring of Grace) is one of the functions of Śiva. Similarly in TDN.1.47, Vallabhācārya asserts that mukti (liberation from saṃsāra) is attained by one who is blessed with the Grace of the Lord and not to anybody (or anything) else.<sup>19</sup>

This doctrine is of Upanisadic antiquity.<sup>20</sup> It was used by teachers to promote the cult of bhakti. Vallabhācārya, however, distinguishes between liberated souls who have attained it by maryādā bhakti and those who attained it through puṣṭi bhakti. Lord Kṛṣṇa wishes to liberate followers of puṣṭi bhakti even though they have not acquired the requisite merit adequately. Vallabhācārya points out that owing to unfavourable (political, social etc.) circumstances, it is difficult to follow the paths of karma and jñāna. Puṣṭi-mārga is the pathway to God, The Upanisadic declaration is:

There is no other way (to go mokṣa).

The Doctrine of Avatāra

Vallabhācārya believes that as per BG, X — the chapter on Vibhūti-Yoga — especially vv 40-41 in which after enumerating celebrities in a number of different fields, Kṛṣṇa says, "There is no end to the persons endowed with my Supreme power (vibhūti) and if there is anyone endowed with Supreme power (vibhūti), he/she should be regarded as born of a portion (aṃśa) of my lustre."<sup>21</sup> Thus in addition to the ten usually believed as incarnations of Viṣṇu such as Divine Fish, Tortoise, and others, Vallabhācārya adds famous personalities from Pāñcarātra system and Vaiṣṇava Āgamas such as Manu, Ṛṣabha, Mahidāsa, Vyāsa, Kapila and others.

As in the BhP, Vallabhācārya regards Kṛṣṇa as the perfectly complete incarnation of the Para Brahman and is endowed with both Knowledge (jñāna) and Action (kriyā) for which Kāśmīr Śaivas use the terms prakāśa and vimarśa. He Himself is the Bhagavān:

kṛṣṇas tu bhagavān svayam

The purpose of an avatāra is to remove the internal agony (of saṁsāra, the antar-duḥkha) and Vyāsa, Kapila or Dattātreyā are thus representatives of avatāras of the jñāna power of the Lord. The other object of taking an avatāra is to remove the external miseries as is done by the Divine Fish, Tortoise, Man-Lion, etc.

There is a third category of avatāras called āvesāvatāras or āvīrbhāvas—Persons inspired with divine power for a particular task. They are considered equal to other avatāras as there is no essential difference between the two (viśeṣābhāvāt āvesāvatārāyoḥ tulayatayā gaṇanā, TDN, III 1.49).

The Para Brahman will be attained through Devotion to the ādhidāivika aspect of the Reality.

Before I conclude I should state what the BrSū regards as Brahman's identity with the following. This is a random sampling of the identification of the Brahman with:

Vaiśvānara (1.2.28), Brahman (1.3.8). Akṣara (1.3.10), Dahara (Ākāśa within 1.3.14), Universal Light (1.3.22), Divine Light, Jyotiṣ (1.3.40), Ākāśa (1.3.41). This random sampling will show that the author of the BrSū has recognised the all-pervasiveness of the Brahman. Tomes have been written on the topic of the Brahman. In this chapter I have limited myself to give some important glimpses of Vallabhācārya's views regarding the Brahman.

Notes

1. शब्द एव प्रमाणम्। तत्राप्यलौकिक-ज्ञापकमेव।
ततः स्वतः सिद्ध-प्रमाण-मात्रं प्रमाणम्।
— तत्त्वार्थ-दीप-निबन्ध (तदीनि), I.7 comm.
2. काण्ड-द्वयस्य अन्योन्योपकारित्वाय साधारणग्रहणम्।
— Aṅubhāsya (AB, I.1.2, p. 120) also वेदाः सर्व एव काण्डद्वयस्थिता अर्धवादादिरूपा अपि।
— तदीनि, I. 6, comm., p. 35
3. वेदाः श्रीकृष्णवाक्यानि व्याससूत्राणि चैव हि। समाधिभाषा व्यासस्य प्रमाणं तद्वत्तुष्टयम्॥
— तदीनि, I.7, pp. 36-37
4. यत्समाधी अनुभूय निरूपितं सा समाधिभाषा।
— तदीनि, I.7, p. 38
5. नैषा तर्केण मतिरापनीया।
— कठ उपनिषद्, 2.7
6. शाक्य-औलुक्य-अक्षपाद-क्षपणक-कपिल-पतञ्जलि-तर्काणामन्योन्यव्याघातात्।
Vallabhācārya quotes BrSū, 2.1.11 and remarks तर्को नाम स्वोत्प्रेक्षिता युक्तिः। सा एकोका नायैरङ्गीक्रियते। स्वतन्त्राणा मयीणां मतिभेदान् etc. (Ibid., Vol. III, pp. 45-46).
7. तदीनि, शास्त्रार्थ प्रकरण, I. 62. Vallabhācārya. iterates अलौकिकं तत्प्रमेयं न युक्त्या प्रतिपद्यते।
8. उत्तरं पूर्वसन्देहवारकं परिकीर्तितम्।
— तदीनि, I. 8-A
9. अविरुद्धं तु यत्वस्य प्रमाणं तद्य नान्यथा।
— तदीनि, I. 8-A
10. वेदान्ते च स्मृतौ ब्रह्मलिङ्गं भगवते तथा।
ब्रह्मेति, परमात्मेति, भगवानिति शब्दयते॥
— तदीनि, I. 6
11. यज्ञरूपो हरिः पूर्वकाण्डे ब्रह्मतनुः परे।
अवतारो हरिः कृष्णः श्रीभागवत ईयते॥
— तदीनि, I.11
12. परं ब्रह्म तु कृष्णो हि सच्चिदानन्दकं बृहत्।
— सिद्धान्त मुक्तावलि, 3 A

13. यत्र, येन, यतो, यस्य, यस्मै यद् यद् यथा यदा। स्यादिदं भगवान् साक्षात् प्रधान-पुरुषेश्वरः॥
— श्रीमद्भागवत, 10.85.4
14. उभयव्यपदेशात्त्वहिकुण्डलवत्।
— BrSū, 3.2.27
15. आरम्भणशब्दादिभ्यस्तदनन्यत्वं प्रतीयते। कार्यस्य कारणानन्यत्वं न मिथ्यात्वम्।
— AB on BrSū, II. 1.14
16. AB on BrSū, 3.3.28 छन्दत उभयाविरोधात्: तथा च भक्तिभार्गीयाणामपि पूर्वं पापनाशो यः स भगवदिच्छाविरोधतः।
17. स्वयं बध्नानि देवेशः स्वयमेव विमुञ्चति।
— तन्त्रालोक, 8.82
18. आत्मसृष्टेर्न वैषम्यं नैर्घृण्यं चापि विद्यते।
— तदीनि, I. 76
19. कृष्णप्रसादयुक्तस्य नान्यस्येति विनिश्चयः।
— तदीनि, I. 47
20. नायमात्मा प्रवचनेन लभ्यः, न मेधया, न बहूना श्रुतेन।
यत्रैवेष्ट वृणुते तेन लभ्यः तस्यैष आत्मा विवृणुते तनुं स्वाम्॥
— कठ उपनिषद्, 2.22, मुण्डक उपनिषद्, 3.2.3
21. नान्तोऽस्ति मम् दिव्यानां विभूतीनाम्। — BG, X. 40
यद् यद् विभूतिमत्सत्त्वं श्रीमदर्जितमेव वा . . . मम तेजोऽशसम्भवम्।
— BG, X. 41

The Concept of Akṣara Brahman

WHAT is akṣara Brahman? It IS Brahman but a special aspect of it which was as if a forgotten chapter in Indian Philosophy.<sup>1</sup> Vallabhācārya deserves the credit of inviting attention to this aspect. Hence a special chapter is devoted to this topic.

Śāṅkara noted two grades of the Brahman.

- (1) Saguṇa — Endowed with attributes, and
- (2) Nirguṇa — Attributeless.

Vallabhācārya, in his usual way, hypothesized the following three grades or forms or aspects of the Brahman<sup>2</sup> as follows:

- (1) The ādhidaivika — The Para Brahman par excellence or Kṛṣṇa or Puruṣottama.
- (2) The ādhyātmika — The Akṣara Brahman. The antaryāmin, Principle dwelling in finite souls.
- (3) The ādhibhautik — The Jagat.

These are distinguished from each other by the 'Bliss' aspect. In jagat due to the Will of the Lord to be many, the bliss-aspect is eclipsed.

Epithets of the Akṣara Brahman<sup>3</sup>

- (1) Ādhāra — Support of Puruṣottama
- (2) Carāṇa — A foot of Puruṣottama
- (3) Avyakta — The unmanifest

- (4) Vyoman or ākāśa — The ether
- (5) Brahman — As distinguished from Para Brahman
- (6) Mukhya jīva — The life principle par excellence
- (7) Kūṣastha — The immutable
- (8) Nirvikāra — The unchanging
- (9) Parama dhāman — The highest abode or the summum banum of the jñānins. The highest abode to the devotees of the Lord.
- (10) Parama vyoman — The Highest Ether
- (11) Haiṁśa puccha — The Tail of a Swan, viz., the ānanda-maya Brahman

Concept of the Akṣara Brahman

The above list of epithets of the akṣara Brahman, throws light on various aspects of the concept of this Brahman as follows:<sup>4</sup>

Out of those forms of the Brahman mentioned above, Kṛṣṇa or Puruṣottama is the complete Supreme Brahman — the highest Bliss (ānanda) and sweetness (rasa). He is Bliss par excellence. He dwells in all, as the inner controller and is called antaryāmin.

Vallabhācārya explains BrSū, 1.2.21: "With slight obscuration of Bliss, the Brahman is called akṣara."<sup>5</sup> When due to the will of the Lord, His joy gets diminished in the capacity", it is called Gaṇitānandakam — as if it is a limited Bliss. Vallabhācārya indicates thereby that the akṣara Brahman is inferior to Kṛṣṇa or Puruṣottama whose Bliss is completely explicit.<sup>6</sup> (See BrSū, III.3.34)

In fact, it is the Supreme Soul who becomes both puruṣa and prakṛti at the beginning of the creation. It is that form of the Supreme that is called akṣara.<sup>7</sup>

The akṣara Brahman is distinct from the para Brahman and also from individual souls who emanate from Him like sparks from fire.

It is through the Will of the para Brahman that the akṣara Brahman assumes or appears to assume the following four forms.<sup>8</sup> (S. Radhakrishnan — The Brahma Sūtra, Intro., pp. 89-90)

- (1) Akṣara itself which appears as prakṛti and puruṣa and is the cause of everything.
- (2) Kāla (Time): It is regarded as a form of God. It is supra-sensible and is inferred from the nature of the effects (kāryānumeya). It is all-pervasive and is the cause that disturbs the equilibrium of guṇas.
- (3) Karma or action is also universal. It manifests itself as different actions in different men.
- (4) Svabhāva is that which produces change (pariṇāma-hetutvam tallakṣaṇam)

The above four forms are eternal principles, one with the Lord. The akṣara form manifests itself as prakṛti and puruṣa and becomes the cause of everything in the universe. When, at the time of creation, the Bliss of the akṣara Brahman becomes obscured, it is called mukhya jīva. It is superior to (other) jīvas. The Will of God when it materializes, becomes prakṛti. The akṣara Brahman is superior both to prakṛti and puruṣa and contains within him millions of worlds along with their protective coverings (āvaraṇas). As TDN, II.96 state: sarvāvaraṇa-yuktāni tasmin aṇḍāni koṭīśāh.

As the spiritual form of para Brahman, the akṣara Brahman incarnated as puruṣa among other incarnations of the Lord.

As the spiritual form of para Brahman, the akṣara Brahman is the object of mediation of jñānīnis. There by they finally merge with it. The four forms mentioned above are created from him. By the upāsana (adoration and knowledge gained thereby) one becomes one with the Supreme ātman. Here Auḍulomi's view deserves notice. (Vide supra, p. 28).

Difference with other Vaiṣṇava Schools

It is not that Vallabhācārya differed only from Śaṅkara. He has serious philosophical differences with other Vaiṣṇava teachers also. Thus Rāmānuja's concept of cit and acit (i.e. jaḍa or non-conscious) being a part of the Lord's person is known as Viśiṣṭādvaita. He holds that the jaḍa or non-conscious parts of God's person shall remain so eternally.

But Vallabhācārya holds that if even a portion (aṁśa) of consciousness (cit) and bliss (ānanda) were to manifest in jaḍa (acit) it becomes one with the Brahman, cit becoming identical with Brahman by the appearance of some glimpse of bliss (ānanda) Vallabhācārya does not condemn jaḍa eternally to the state of jaḍatva (non-consciousness). Rāmānuja does not accept that the Brahman is the receptacle of contradictory attributes (viruddha-dharmāśrayatva) as stated by Vallabhācārya.

Vallabhācārya holds that there is no difference between the Brahman, jīva and jagat. But Madhva, a realist, regards that God, individual souls and the world are different inter se. He accepts perception (pratyakṣa), inference (anumāna) and śabda (Vedic authority) as the three pramāṇas (valid means of knowledge). Madhva regards the Brahman as a possessor of attributes, but Vallabhācārya regards Brahman as endowed with both attributes (sadharmaka) and attributelessness (nidharmaka). In other words, Madhva does not accept that the Brahman is a receptacle of contradictory attributes. About causation Madhva regards Brahman as the Instrumental cause and māyā as the material cause (upādāna) of the world. Vallabhācārya does not accept māyā to have independent existence apart from Brahman, and regards Brahman as both the material and instrumental cause of the world. Madhva does not accept the concept of akṣara Brahman as enunciated by Vallabhācārya.

Rāmānuja and Madhva belonged to an earlier period. Hence we should regard that Vallabhācārya did not accept the above mentioned views as advocated by them.

Notes

1. G.H. Bhatt, History of Indian Philosophy, Eastern and Western, Vol. I, p. 350.
2. सर्वेषां त्रिगुणत्वाद् हि त्रयो भेदाः पृथङ्मताः । आधिभौतिकमध्यात्ममधिभूतमिति स्मृताः ॥
— तदीनि, II. 119
3. B.M. Dhruva, An Introduction to the Śuddhādvaita School of Philosophy, pp. 53-54.

4. The concept of akṣara Brahman:

प्रकृतिः पुरुषशोभा परमात्माऽभवत् पुरा।
यद् रूपं समधिष्ठाय तदक्षरमुदीर्यते॥
आनन्दांश-तिरोभावः सत्त्वमात्रेण तत्र हि।
मुख्यजीवस्ततः प्रोक्तः सृष्टीच्छावशगो हरिः।
इच्छामात्रान् तिरोभावः तस्यायमुपचर्यते।
ब्रह्म-कूटस्थव्यक्तादि-शब्दैर्वाच्यो निरन्तरम्॥
सर्वावरणयुक्तानि तस्मिन् पिण्डानि कोटिशः ।
मूला विच्छेदरूपेण तदाधारतया स्थितः।
प्रभुत्वेन हरेः स्फूर्तो लोकत्वेन तदुद्भवः।
अन्तर्याम्यत तारादि — रूपे षादत्वमस्य हि॥
हंसाकृतित्व-कथने पुच्छत्वं परमात्मनः।
तदुपासनया ज्ञानात् परमात्मात्ममस्य हि॥

— तदीनि, II. 99-103

5. पुरुषस्य ब्रह्मत्वं निःसंदिग्धमेव। ईषदानन्द-तिरो-भावेन ब्रह्माक्षरमुच्यते। प्रकटानन्दः पुरुष इति . . . तस्माद् दृश्यत्वादिगुणकः परमात्मैव।

— AB on BrSū, I.2.21 (Vol. II, p. 563)

6. On इयदामननात् (BrSū, 3.3.34) Vallabhācārya explains: इयदिति परिमाण वचनम् Quoting तैत्तिरीय उपनिषद्, 2.8-A indicate multiple grades of joy of men, of Gandharvas, etc., and finally the bliss of the Brahman i.e. akṣara Brahman is regarded hundred fold that of Prajāpati. Thus iyat means 'measurable' up to a particular limit to quote Vallabhācārya: इयत् एतावदित्यक्षरानन्दस्य सावधिकत्वेन श्रुती कथनानन्तमयत्वेन निरवध्यानन्दात्मकत्वस्य पुरुषोत्तमे कथनात्तथोक्ति।

— AB. on 3.3.34 (Vol. IV, p. 329)

7. प्रकृतिः पुरुषशोभा, etc., is quoted above as तदीनि, II. 99; BG says यस्मात्क्षरमतीतोऽहमक्षरन्दपि चोत्तमः। अतोऽस्मि लोके वेदेऽस्मिन् प्रथितः पुरुषोत्तमः॥

— BG, 15.18

8. S. Radhakrishnan, The Brahma Sūtra, Intro., pp. 89-90.

The Individual Soul (Jivātman)

VARIOUS speculations about jivātman or individual soul — right from the denial of its very existence up to its identification with the Supreme Brahman — have been expressed by Indian Philosophers. Thus Canonical Buddhism denies the necessity of the hypothesis called 'individual Soul'. (The nairātmya theory). The Prābhākara school of Mīmāṃsā regards the soul or Self as unconscious or jaḍa even in the state of liberation. The other great Mīmāṃsā teacher, Kumārila Bhaṭṭa holds that the Self or soul is conscious; that it has jñāna-śakti, even during sleep and an eternal unity of subject and object (a tilt towards the Vedānta). The Naiyāyikas regard the Self an eternal, indestructible and an infinite substance beyond space and time. It has consciousness as an adventitious quality (āgantuka caitanya).

Vallabha's Concept of the Soul

For the presentation of the views of Vallabhācārya on the individual Soul (jīva), it will be convenient to state the interpretations of Vallabhācārya, from the beginning of the topic on the soul in the BrSū, viz., from BrSū, II.3.16.

On the strength of Śrutis (Upaniṣads) like Kaṭha<sup>1</sup> and Bṛhadāraṇyaka,<sup>2</sup> Vallabhācārya asserts the eternity of jīvas. They are not created but they emerge out of the Brahman like sparks from fire. As he states in TDN (Tattvārthaa-Dīpa-Nibhandā)<sup>3</sup>, it was due to the Will of the Lord that all formless souls were created like sparks from fire. But this emanation (from fire) of sparks is not creation.<sup>4</sup>

The souls are associated with the body in a secondary (bhākta) sense. The presence of jīva is felt when he is connected with the body and not when he is dissociated with it. When Devadatta is born, it is the body that is born and not that the jīva is created. When jātakarma and other saṁskāras of Devadatta are performed, they are applied to the body of Devadatta and not to the Soul. It is only in a secondary sense (bhākta) that they are attributed to the Soul. Thus birth and death refer to the body only and figuratively to the souls connected with the body.<sup>5</sup> BrSū (2.3.17) asserts the eternity of the Soul:<sup>6</sup> "The soul . . . being eternal (as it is known) from Śruti Texts."

The Attributes of the Soul

The first attributes of the Soul is consciousness. Vallabhācārya interprets jñā in BrSū, 2.3.18 as caitanya-svarūpa. He points out that the 'Knowledge' of the soul is accepted by Śrutis. Rāmānuja and Nimbārka interpreted jñā as both knowledge and knower. Vallabhācārya calls Śaṅkara "another incarnation of Mahāyāni Bauddha due to non-recognition of the distinction of para Brahman from sātrātman".<sup>7</sup> Besides this, Vallabhācārya's stand about the soul is: When it emanates from akṣara (Brahman), it was both knower-cum-knowledge, but after obscuration of the Bliss-aspect, it remains merely consciousness, neither knowledge nor the knower. But due to the artificial instruments, viz., mind (manas), intelligence (buddhi) and ego (ahamkāra) it becomes again knower as well as knowledge.

I think, from intuitional point of view, in spiritual experience, the soul transcends both as well as the relation between them. It is immaterial whether the soul is the knower or the knowledge.

The Size of the Soul (BrSū, 2.3.19-32)

The souls are atomic in size. They are innumerable but have the Brahman as their antaryāmin (indweller).

Vallabhācārya adduces the following grounds to prove the atomicity of the soul (as explained by Vallabhācārya)

1. Scriptures like the Kauṣītaki Upaniṣad (III.3) speak of the movements of the soul such as going out and returning (utkrānti- gati-āgati). Such movement is impossible if the soul be all-pervasive (as held by Śaṅkara) or of body-size (as posited by Jains). Later on BrSū, 3.2.22, he quotes Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad (V.9) to express the atomicity.<sup>8</sup> The word sva — in the next sūtra, svātmanā shows that the movements mentioned are strictly connected with the soul.<sup>9</sup>

2. The objection: How can an atomic soul occupying a part of the body feel sensation all over the body?

Vallabhācārya (that is BrSū) replies: "Just as sandal-paste applied to one part of the body has a cooling effect all over the body (BrSū, 3.2.23) similarly the soul which occupies one part of body, viz., the heart<sup>10</sup> (BrSū, 3.2.24) experiences the pleasure and the pain extending all over the body.

3. The soul may be atomic in size but its inherent consciousness (viz., caitanya guṇa) is pervasive. Just as the fragrance of a rose or a campaka flower spreads out of the flower in the surrounding area, this attribute (caitanya guṇa) of the Soul which resides in the heart, pervades all over the body to the tip of the finger and end of hairs. (BrSū, 2.3.23-27)
4. Śruti passages like prajñāyā śasrītram samāruhya (Kauṣītaki Upaniṣad, 3.6) show that intelligence is the kāraṇa and as such an attribute of the soul which is of atomic size. Śaṅkara regards sūtras up to this (BrSū, 23.19-28) as pūrva-pakṣa. But with due reference to Śaṅkara, I find BrSū seldom uses such a number of sūtras for pūrva-pakṣa.
5. It is generally believed that the great sentence (mahāvākya) tat tvam asi advocates the identity of the Brahman and the ātman. The mahāvākya is a part of Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.9.4) which reads:

sa ya eṣo'ñimaitadātmyamidam sarvaṃ tat satyam sa ātmā tat tvam asi śvetaka to

Here sa (ātmā) is masculine and it cannot grammatically connected with tat (in the mahāvākya) which is grammatically the neuter gender. Tat must be connected with aitadātmyam.

The sentence thus should be aitadātmyam (Neut.gender) tat tvam asi

Aitadātmya means brahmātmakatva and not 'identify with the Brahman'. Thus according to Śruti quoted above, there is no identity in toto in the individual soul and the Brahman. Vallabhācārya points out that the identity is limited to guṇas only. The most distinguishing guṇa of the Brahman is Bliss (ānanda). This is inherent in the jīva. It is however, latent in the jīva just as kingship is latent in the crown prince, (rāja-jyeṣṭha-putra-vat).<sup>11</sup> When the soul acquires that Bliss of Brahman, he becomes 'Brahmā-like'. But this position, viz., brahmatā is not absolute identity with the Brahman. When the soul is enmeshed in samsāra, the soul may not have the ānanda manifest in him but its potentiality is obscured — the inherent possession of ānanda in the soul cannot be denied.

This ānanda is just like virility (pumstva) which exists in childhood but it becomes manifest after the attainment of youth.<sup>12</sup>

Vallabhācārya concludes that topic by stating that though Blissfulness (ānanda) is not manifest in the soul involved in samsāra, it is inherent in him though obscured and unmanifest. Texts like tat-tvam-asi imply similarity in the guṇas of the individual soul and the Brahman and not complete identity between the two.

About the thumb-like size of the soul, Vallabhācārya believes it to be atom-like in size and its location is in the heart.

The Soul as an Agent (Kartā) (BrSū, 1.3.40)

Vallabhācārya refutes the view of Sāṃkhya who attributes kartṛtva of an action, to prakṛti. Vallabhācārya states that it is to jīvas that Vedic passages, i.e. injunctions of prescription of karmas are laid down for obtaining felicity here and mokṣa hereafter. Prakṛti, being jaḍa is incapable of doing these (jaḍasya aśakyatvāt).<sup>13</sup>

Śruti mentions jīva's freedom (and ability) to move in celestial world (gandharva-lokeṣu).<sup>14</sup> Sense-organs are mere instruments.<sup>15</sup> In the Taittirīya Upaniṣad (2.5.1), the term viñāna in viñānam yajñam tanute karmāṇi tanute'pi ca<sup>15</sup>

is used in the sense of jīva, the possessor of viñāna and performance of sacrifices are prescribed for jīvas. The Sāṃkhya interpretation attributes agency (kartṛtva) to buddhi and enjoyment to jīva. But buddhi being jaḍa is incapable of action. I may add: In Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad (2.1.17) intelligence is said to be an instrument through which the soul acts. Jīva has both kartṛtva (agency) as well as bhokṛtva (enjoyment of fruits of karmans). He is like a carpenter who makes a chariot (Agency) and enjoys a ride in it.<sup>17</sup> Jīvas are agents for themselves as well as for others.

It may be noted that the Soul is an agent when connected with adjuncts, i.e. sense-organs and buddhi (BrSū, 2.3.40).

Jiva's Dependence on the Brahman

The ability to act (kartṛtva) of the jīva is not absolutely independent. It depends on the Brahman of which it is a part. It may be argued that it is due to the contact with the buddhi that a Soul becomes an agent (kartā). But as buddhi is jaḍa (without consciousness) its contact cannot activate the jīva. Nor does the activity becomes manifest in the Soul due to his non-possession of Sense-organs. The view which condemns everything as illusory is not acceptable, as it is the view of Mādhyamika Bauddhas.

The jīva has inherited excellences like aiśvarya, etc., from the Brahman. The Śruti states that, "The Lord turns a jīva as (morally) bad if he wishes to degrade him and will get holy actions performed through him, if He wants to elevate him."<sup>18</sup> (Kauṣītaki Upaniṣad, 3.8) But this exposes the Brahman to the charge of partiality (vaiśamya) and cruelty (nairghṛṇya).

But this is not the case. In granting fruits of karmas, he is the occasional cause in allotting equal fruits according to karmas to jīvas (karmāpekṣa). In commenting on BrSū, 2.3.42, Vallabhācārya writes in sūtra-Style.<sup>19</sup> For example: In granting of fruits, dependent on karmas, etc. (see Notes).

The Relation between the Individual Soul and the Brahman

In Śāstrārtha Prakaraṇa (27-30), Vallabhācārya lucidly states his views as follows:<sup>20</sup>

In the beginning of creation, He (the Brahman) who was alone, desired to be many. Due to the Will of the Brahman and dependent on it, at first non-conscious objects with sadamśa (sat, i.e. merely existence as a part), and conscious beings (characterised by part-consciousness and intelligence) emanated from the Brahman like sparks from fire. They are bereft of Bliss (ānanda) and are nirindriya (devoid of Sense-Organ).

Here the gradation is worth noting:

The Brahman has sat (Existence), cit (Consciousness) and ānanda (Bliss). Animate or intelligent beings have sat (existence) and cit (Consciousness) as the qualities and the Bliss part is obscured. When a jīva, through the dint of spiritual knowledge or bhakti regains his part of Bliss (ānandāmśa), he ceases to be atomic and becomes Brahma-like and ubiquitous (BrSū devotees a long section. 2.3.42-53) to delineate the relations between the jīva and the Brahman. In the previous section the Brahman is said to be the controller of the jīvas. Now, the relation between them is like that of a master and servant or sparks and fire? Vallabhācārya holds that the jīva is an aṁśa (part) of the Brahman —

brahmā-vāde aṁśa-pakṣaḥ

This position is confirmed in the BG, 15.7. The Lord says: A fragment of mine has become a living Soul and is eternal.<sup>21</sup> But the original, inherent Bliss-part (ānandāmśa) of the soul is obscured. Now if the jīva is a part of the Brahman, the latter must be affected by the misery, etc., of the jīva, just as some pain to the hand causes pain to the whole body. But while commenting on BrSū, 2.3.46 prakāśādivan naiva paraḥ. Vallabhācārya explains that (being affected) is not the case.

Prin. J.G. shah explains:

The sūtrakāra allows the legality of the objection, but to strengthen his position he cites an analogous case of prakāśa (Light). We know that heat or light causes burning sensation in others, but heat itself is immune from it.

On 'nāgner hi tāpo, na himasya tat syāt'. Vallabhācārya says "Fire is not scorched by the heat of the fire, nor the cold by its coldness."

J.G. Shah proceeds:

Just as a doṣa (defect) of a lighted object does not affect the prakāśa (light), the defect (doṣa) of the jīva, a portion of Brahman does not affect it anyway.

— An Introduction to the Aṅubhāṣya pp. 176-77.

Vallabhācārya quotes here a verse conveying the purport of the above argument:

Just as the sun, the eye of all the worlds is not affected by external defects (troubles) of the eye, the Lord, the soul of all the people is not affected by the miseries of the people — Kaṭha Upaniṣad, 2.2.11 on BrSū, 2.3.43-46.

Vallabhācārya supports his argument by quoting from the Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad in which we are told that out of the two birds perching on the same branch of a tree, one eats of the fruit of the tree while the other looks on without eating.<sup>22</sup> And also the Kaṭha Upaniṣad which declares that the Brahman is not affected by the eternal miseries of man.

Moreover, prescription of an act (vidhi) and prohibition (niṣedha) are prescribed for a jīva due to his connection with a particular body, mind, etc., and not to the incorporeal Brahman. Since individuals are different, there is no confusion in the miseries of a particular person with that of another (BrSū, 2.3.48-49).

Due to obscuration of ānanda (Bliss) the jīva is like a mere reflection of the sun seen in the water below (BrSū, 2.3.50).<sup>23</sup> But this reflection (ā-bhāsa) does not imply mithyātva of the jīva or the Brahman. The prescription and prohibition of duties (anujñā-parihārau) to a jīva are due to the relation (connection) of the jīva with a particular body. This does not create any difficulty in accepting the theory of jīva's being a part of the Brahman.

Finally, Vallabhācārya rejects the theory of adṛṣṭa, an unseen principle of the nature of religious merits and demerits. Sāṃkhyas, Naiyāyikas also believe in the multiplicity of Souls. They explain the difference in the experiences of the pleasure and pain (the bhogavyavasthā) of the jīvas to their adṛṣṭa. The BrSū, rejects the hypothesis of adṛṣṭa (BrSū, 2.3.52) and even if it is accepted for the sake of argument, it is ineffective to mould the nature and the form of the jīva.

To sum up: According to Vallabhācārya:

I. Souls: Eternal, Uncreated

Individual souls are eternal and are not created by the Brahman.

II. Attributes of the Soul(s)

- (1) Consciousness or possession of knowledge (caitanya-svarūpa).
- (2) Size of the soul is atomic, spatially.
- (3) Location — the heart, but pervades the whole body by its caitanya-guṇa.
- (4) The Śruti text (Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.9.4) states the similarity (aitadātmya) or likeness between the Brahman and the soul and not the identity in toto.
- (5) Like the Brahman, the jīva has Bliss (ānanda) as an inherent dharma (quality) but it is latent or unmanifest while the jīva is enmeshed in saṃsāra.
- (6) The jīva is both an agent (kartā) and enjoyer (bhoktā) of his karmas.
- (7) The Agency (kartṛtva) of the Soul is not absolute but depends on the Brahman. But this does not imply partiality (vaiṣamya) and cruelty (nairghṛṇya) on the part of the Brahman. God dispenses fruits good or bad according to the past actions of the individual.

- (8) Misery etc., of the jīva is due to jīva's connection with the body.
- (9) Individual souls are distinct and different. There is no confusion in their experience of karma.

III. Relations between the Jiva and the Brahman

The jīva is an aṁśa (part) of the Brahman. But the Brahman is not affected by the pleasure or pain of the jīva.

The distinct features of the Brahman, jīva and jagat (jaḍa) are as follows:

- (1) The Brahman: Perfect Bliss (ānanda), sat (Existence) and cit (Consciousness).
- (2) The individual souls: Sat (Existence), cit (Consciousness), but ānanda (Bliss) — dormant or latent.
- (3) The Jagat — the world: Sat (Existence) only, cit (Consciousness) and ānanda (Bliss) are obscured.
- (4) The jīva can regain Brahma-like Bliss through bhakti (Devotion) and realization of Brahman's identity and can become Brahma-like and all-pervading.
- (5) Jivas are like reflections of the sun in water. Hence, the Brahman is not affected by the harmans of jīvas. But the analogy of reflection in water does not imply mithyātva of the jīvas.
- (6) Like the two Upaniṣadic birds perching on the same branch of tree, the Brahman is merely an on-looker.
- (7) The religious prescriptions (vidhi) and prohibitions (niṣedha) pertain to the body of the jīva.
- (8) Vallabhācārya rejects the theory of adṛṣṭa. It is ineffective to mould the nature and form of jīvas.

Notes

1. न जायते म्रियते वा विपश्चिन्नायं कृतश्चिन् वभूव कश्चित्।
अजो नित्यः शाश्वतोऽयं पुराणो न हन्यते हन्यमाने शरीरे ॥

2. स वा एष महानज आत्माऽजरोऽमरोऽमृतोऽभयो।
ब्रह्माभयं वै ब्रह्माभयः वै ब्रह्म भवति य एवं वेद॥
— बृहदारण्यक उपनिषद्, 4.4.25
3. सृष्ट्यादीं निर्गताः सर्वे निराकारास्तदिच्छया।
विस्फुलिंगा इवाग्रेस्तु सदंशेन जडा अपि॥
— तदीनि, 1.28
4. विस्फुलिङ्गबदुच्छरणं नोत्पत्तिः। नामरूप संबंधाभावात्।
— AB on BrSū, 2.3.16 (Vol. III, p. 274)
5. शरीरस्यान्वय-व्यतिरेकाभ्यामेव जीवस्य तद्भावित्वम्।
देहधर्मो जीवस्य भाक्तः। तसम्बन्धेनैवोत्पत्ति-व्यपदेशः॥
— AB on BrSū, 2.3.16 (Vol. II, p. 270)
6. नाभाऽयुते-नित्यत्वाच्च ताभ्यः।
— BrSū, 2.3.17
7. यः सर्वज्ञः सर्वशक्तिः। अयमात्मा अपहृतपाप्मा। अधिकं तु भेदनिर्देशादित्यादिबाधः।
तस्मात् तदंशस्य तद् व्यपदेशवाक्य-मात्रं स्वीकृत्य शिष्टपरिग्रहार्थं माध-यमिकस्यैवायमपरावतारः।
— AB on BrSū, 2.3.18 (Vol. III, p. 282)
8. बालाग्रशतभगस्य शतधा कल्पितस्य च।
भागो जीवः स विज्ञेयः।
— श्रुवाङ्गतर उपनिषद्, 5-9
9. स्वात्मना जीवरूपेण गत्यागत्योः सम्बन्धी जीवः। अतो मध्यमपरिमाणमयुक्तमिति अणुरेव भवति॥
— AB on BrSū, 2.3.20 (Vol. III, p. 290)
10. हृदि हि — हृदि जीवस्य स्थितिः।
— AB on BrSū, 3.2.24 (Vol. II, p. 290)
11. यावद् आत्मा ब्रह्म भवति आनन्दांशप्राकट्येन तावदेव तद्व्यपदेशो राजन्येष्वपुत्रवत्।
— AB on BrSū, 2.3.30 (Vol. III, p. 325)
12. व्यपदेश-दशायामपि आनन्दांशस्य नात्यन्तमसत्त्वम्। यथा पुंस्त्वमेकादि स्यामर्थं बाल्ये
विद्यमानमेव रीवने प्रकाशयते तथा आनन्दांशस्य अपि सत एव व्यक्तियोगः।
— AB on BrSū, 2.3.31 (Vol. III, p. 328)

Vallabhācārya supplements some verses from TDN (तदीनि), I. 53-54

व्यापकत्व-श्रुतिस्तस्य भगवत्त्वे न युज्यते ॥ 53 ॥

आनन्दांशाभिव्यक्तौ तु तत्र ब्रह्माण्ड-कोटयः।

प्रतीयेरन् परिच्छेदो व्यापकत्वं च तस्य तत् ॥ 54 ॥

13. जीवमेवाधिकृत्य वेदेऽभ्युदय-निःश्रेयस्-फलार्थं सर्वाणि कर्माणि विहितानि . . . जडस्य; अशक्यतवात्।
— AB on BrSū, 2.3.33 (Vol. III, p. 333)
14. BrSū, 2.3.34 and AB on it.
15. BrSū, 2.3.35 and AB on it.
16. BrSū, 2.3.36 and AB on it.
17. BrSū, 2.3.40 and AB on it.
18. एष ह्येव साधु कर्म कारयति तं यमेभ्यो लोकेभ्यः उन्निनीपते
एष उ एवमेनमसाधु। कर्म कारयति तं यमयो निनीपते॥
— कापीतकी उपनिषद, 3.8
19. फलादाने कर्मपेक्षः कर्म-कारणो प्रयत्नापेक्षः। प्रयत्ने कामापेक्षः कामे मर्यादापेक्षः, इति मर्यादा-रक्षणार्थं वेदं चकार। ततो न ब्रह्मणि दोषगन्धोऽपि। न चानीधरात्वम्।
— AB on BrSū, 2.3.42 (Vol. III, pp. 357)
20. विम्बुलिङ्गा इवाग्नेर्हिजडजीवा विनिर्गताः।
सर्वतः पाणिपादान्तान् सर्वतोऽक्षिशिरामुखान्।
निरीन्द्रियान् स्वरूपेण तादृशादिति निश्चयः।
सदंशेन जडाः पूर्वं चिदंशेनेतरे अपि।
अन्यधर्म तिरोभावान् मूलेच्छातोऽश्वतोत्रिणः॥
— तदीनि, शास्त्रार्थ, 1.27-36
21. धर्मवांशो जीवलोके जीवभूतः सनातनः।
— BG, 15-7
22. द्वा सुपर्णा सयुजा सखायः - - -
तयोरन्यः पिप्पठं स्वादु अत्ति।
अनश्नन् अन्यः अभिचाकशीति॥
— श्वेताश्वतर उपनिषद, 4.6, मुण्डक उपनिषद, 3.1.1
23. मूर्धो यथा सर्वलोकस्य चक्षुः।
न लिप्यते चाक्षुर्पर्याह्लादोपैः॥
एकस्तथा सर्वभूतान्तरात्मा।
न लिप्यते लांकदुःखेन बाह्यः॥

The Jagat (World)

UPANIṢADS like the Aitareya<sup>1</sup> (1.1.1) state that being tired of loneliness, the Lord became many and what is, is the Brahman (Chândogya Upaniṣad,<sup>2</sup> 3.14.1). This is the doctrine of the reality of the world (jagat-satyatva). Jagat emanated from the Brahman, like sparks from fire and is endowed with the characteristic called sat (existence).<sup>3</sup> The jagat is different from saṁsāra which is characterised by Transiency.

The jagat, which emanated from the Brahman, is a matter of perception. In commenting on BrSū, 2.2.28, Vallabhācārya refutes the doctrine of the viñānavādins who hold that prapañca is beyond cognisance and hence non-existent. Vallabhācārya states that prapañca is actually cognised or seen. Hence it is a reality. He derides the comment by asking, “How can one believe in a man who denies what he see?”<sup>4</sup> In commenting on the next Sūtra:

vaidharṇyācca na svapnādivat (BrSū, 2.2.29)

Vallabhācārya says:

And on account of difference in nature (ideas of the waking state) are not like those in dream. The sūtrakāra means that these are ideas of two different natures. Those in dreams, illusions, etc., are different from those of the waking state. The ideas of dreaming state are negated in waking life, while those in waking state continue to exist without change.

are not negated in any other state. He has also taken the example of a pillar.<sup>5</sup>

On the next sūtra, Vallabhācārya refutes the position of viññāna-vāda as follows:

Viññāna-vāda attempts to account for the variety of ideas by the variety of mental impressions, without any reference to external objects. But without the perception of external objects, the existence of mental impressions is impossible. If it is argued that desires are beginningless, the statement will have the fault of 'Blind following the blind' (andha-paramparā nyāya). The positive and the negative methods of argument (anvaya and vyatireka) are in favour of the reality of objects.<sup>6</sup>

Rāmānuja argues that,

We nowhere perceive cognitions not inherent a cognising subject and not referring to objects.

In Brahma-Vāda, the Brahman is regarded as abhinna-nimittopādāna-kāraṇa of the jagat and was stated in BrSū, 2.1.14, there is no material difference between cause and effect. If the cause (the Brahman) is real, its effect (the jagat) is real. The jagat is the play of Kṛṣṇa wherein he assumes name and form.<sup>7</sup>

The Brahman: The Material Cause of Jagat

BrSū, 1.4.23 to 1.4.27 prove that the Brahman is the Material and the Efficient cause of the world. Their text may be briefly summarised here:

(The Brahman is) the material cause also, for this view does not conflict with the initial statement and illustrations (1.4.23). It is so on account of action referring to itself owing to transformation (1.4.26). And Brahman is celebrated as its (world's) source (1.4.27) — and because of the statement of volition (abhidhyā). It is the material cause as it is from the Brahman that the jagat comes into being and in which it is reabsorbed (Chāndogya Upaniṣad, 1.9.1). The effects cannot be absorbed by anything else than their material cause.

I may add a few explanatory remarks:

1.4.26: The Brahman is the material cause owing to its transformation. As Taittiriya Upaniṣad (2.7) states: "The ātman transforms itself into its own Self. That is "The Self got itself transformed into the things of the world." Here it asserts avikṛta-parināma-vāda. Transformation with no change in its being). Śāṅkara takes his usual adhyāsa view and Bhāskara criticizes Śāṅkara's view as Mahāyānika.

1.4.27: The Brahman is 'sung', that is, celebrated as the source of all.

As BrSū, 1.4.28 states: 'Hereby all the doctrines opposed to the Vedānta view are explained.'<sup>8</sup> A few more points from Vallabha's commentary on these sūtras will clarify his point of view:

1.4.23: Vallabhācārya quotes the Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.1.4) and says: 'As the knowledge of a lump of clay — the material cause — leads to the knowledge of all things of clay, the Brahman being the material cause of all existing things, its knowledge leads to the knowledge of all.'<sup>9</sup>

Conclusion

The world is a reality in the form of the Brahman. The samavāyī kāraṇa (material cause) is the Brahman and not prakṛti. (AB Vol. II, p. 975)

1.4.24: As Taittiriya Upaniṣad, 2.6.1. states that the Brahman had the volition (abhidhyā) to be many and it became so. This confirms the truth that the Brahman is the material cause of the world. The statement in the Chāndogya Upaniṣad (1.9.1) about the origin (āvirbhāva), sustenance and annihilation (tirobhāva) of the universe from and into the Brahman proves Brahman's being the material cause. Vallabhācārya concludes his commentary on that sūtra by quoting 'ekatvena pṛthaktvena', etc., from BG, IX.15.

1.4.25: Confirms Brahmā's being the samavāyī kāraṇa by quoting Chāndogya Upaniṣad (1.9.1) and BG, X.8.

1.4.26: Brahman's manifestation is only a change of phase not a vikāra (Transformation). The Brahman's transformation into jagat is avikṛta-pariṇāma with no change within it) (Br.) Brahman's transformation of itself shows that it is both the Agent and the effect (svasya eva karma-kartṛ-bhāvāt). Vallabhācārya concludes that the world (kārya or effect) is a change or transformation of the cause (Brahman) and Brahman is the material cause of the world.<sup>10</sup>

The Creation or Manifestation and disappearance (destruction) are known as the āvīrbhāva (manifestation) and tīrobhāva (obscuration) power of the Brahman. It is like the unfolding (prasārita) and folding (saṁveṣṭita or saṁveṣṭana) of a piece of cloth.

Vallabhācārya has convincingly proved that the jagat is the ādhibhautika aspect of the Brahman. It is identical with the Brahman with the aspects of consciousness and Bliss being obscured for the time being.

To Sum Up

The jagat is the ādhibhautik aspect of the Brahman. Through His volition, the Brahman became many and manifested Himself as the World. But thereby there is no change (vikāra) in Him. This is called Avikṛta-pariṇāma-vāda. Jagat is cognisable and not merely ideational as vijñāna-vāda holds. The Brahman (a reality) is the cause and the world is the effect but there is no difference between the cause and the effect (abhinna-nimittopādāna-kāraṇa). Jagat or prapāṅca and saṁsāra are different as saṁsāra is transient. The so-called 'creation' is the manifestation (āvīrbhāva) and the 'destruction' is simply (tīrobhāva). The jagat is identical with the Brahman with the consciousness aspect and Bliss-aspect temporarily obscured.

Notes

1. आत्मा वा इदमेक अग्र आसीत्, नान्यत् किञ्चन मियत्, स ईक्षत लोकात्रु सृजा इति।
— ऐतरेय उपनिषद्, 1.1.1
2. सर्वं खल्विदं ब्रह्म।
— छांदोग्य उपनिषद्, 3.14.1
3. विस्फुलिंगा इवाग्नेस्तु सदंशेन जडा अपि।

आनन्दांश-स्वरूपेण सर्वान्तर्यामिरूपिणः॥

— तदीनि, I. 28

4. On नाभाव उपलब्धेः (BrSā, 2.2.28) Vallabhācārya concludes यस्तु उपलभमान एव नाहमुपलभ इति वदति स कथमुपादेयवचनः स्यात्।
5. नैवं जागरितोपलब्धं वस्तु स्तम्भादिकं कस्याम् अपि अवस्थायां बाध्यते।
— Śaṅkara on BrSā, 2.2.29
6. अर्धव्यतिरेकेण वासनाया अभावात् वासनाव्यतिरेकेणापि अर्थोपलब्धेः, अन्वयव्यतिरेकाभ्यामर्थसिद्धिः।
— AB on BrSā, 2.2.30
7. नमो भगवते तस्मै कृष्णाय अद्भुतकर्मणे।
रूपनामविभेदेन जगत् क्रीडति यो यतः॥
— तदीनि, I. 1
8. The text of the sūtras mentioned here:
1.4.23: प्रकृतिश्च प्रतिज्ञादृष्टान्तानुपरोधात्।
1.4.24: अभिध्योपदेशाच्च।
1.4.25: साक्षाद्योभयाद्ग्रात्।
1.4.26: आत्मकृतेः परिणामात्।
1.2.27: योनिश्च हियते।
1.4.28: एतेन सर्वे व्याख्याता व्याख्याताः।
9. भगवान् ज्ञातः . . . सर्वं ज्ञातं भवति। . . . अतो ब्रह्मरूपेण सत्यस्य जगतः ब्रह्मैव समवायिकारणम्।
— AB on BrSā, 1.4.29 (Vol. II, pp. 971)
10. तस्माद् ब्रह्मपरिणामलक्षणं कार्यं इति जगत्समवाय-कारणत्वं ब्रह्मण एव सिद्धम्।
— AB on BrSā, 1.4.26 (Vol. II, pp. 981)

Epilogue

THUS far we have seen how the early man in India was fascinated and mystified by the grandeur of Nature around him. It became a challenge to his intelligence and curiosity. He tried to probe deeply the Reality underlying this miraculous phenomenon.

He reasoned: As nothing comes out of nothing (asat), there must be some positive Reality (sat) which creates and controls the world. The Upanisadic period records such speculations about the nature of the Reality and its relations with Man and the World. In course of time, stray speculations developed into thought-currents which came to be known as Dvaita, Advaita, Viśiṣṭādvaita, etc.

We do not know since when the Reality came to be designated as Śiva or Viṣṇu. But whatever be the name of the Reality and whatever the thought-patterns regarding the relations of the Reality with Man and the World, they had an implicit faith in the validity of the Śruti texts. The Bhagavad Gītā though a part of the epic Mahābhārata, was unanimously accepted by them as an authoritative text (prasthāna) as it contained the essence of Upaniṣads. The third prasthāna (Valid authority) accepted by all is the Śāriraka or Brahma Sūtra, though it is a commentary and a synthesis of the doctrines in Upaniṣads.

The dialogue continued in the post-Upaniṣadic period as can be seen from the records of opinions of the eight ācāryas in the pre-Brahma Sūtra, yet post-Upaniṣadic period.

In the post-Brahma Sūtra period, the dialogue continued vigorously. The land-marks of the debate, the progress in the development of philosophical thought, are associated with the names of the exponents of those doctrines such as ajāta-vāda of Gauḍapāda, Advaita (kevalādvaita) of Śaṅkara, bhedābheda-vāda of Bhāskara, the Viśiṣṭādvaita theory of (Vaiṣṇava) Rāmānuja, the Śaiva Viśiṣṭādvaita (with a tilt to Advaita) of Śrīkaṇṭha, Dvaita of Madhva, the Svābhāvika Bhedābheda of the Vaiṣṇava Nimbārka, the Dvaitādvaita (also called Śakti Viśiṣṭādvaita) of Śrīpati Paṇḍit. These different shades of doctrines form the background of Vallabhācārya's philosophy.

Being a staunch devotee of Kṛṣṇa, Vallabhācārya regards the Bhāgavata Purāṇa as the remover of all doubts (sarva-sandeha-vāraka). Though he does not call the Bhāgavata as the fourth prasthāna, he regarded all these four (three prasthānas and the Bhāgavata Purāṇa) as constituting a single body of pramānas.

The Supreme Reality is Kṛṣṇa or Brahman. He is one without a second. By his sheer Will-Power, He creates, sustains, and annihilates the world — in fact He can do anything He wills, without the help of māyā or avidyā. His Will-Power is not different from Him. This doctrine is known as Śuddhādvaita as it is not 'soiled' by māyā. He is the material and instrumental cause of the world, still He is sat-cit-ānanda Himself. He is the repository of contradictory qualities like saguṇa, nirguṇa, etc. It is through His Grace that one can get mokṣa. As against Śaṅkara, he firmly declares that as the Brahman is real, His creation, the world, is real.

Vallabha is also a proponent of a special kind of bhakti called puṣṭi bhakti. (See Appendix I)

The Brahma-Vāda (Discussion about the Brahman) enunciated by Vallabha emphasizes the one-ness of jaḍa, jīva and antaryāmin. Like Rāmānuja he does not condemn the jaḍa to eternity. He says that in jaḍa (material objects, non-sentient ones) there is the quality of sat, i.e. existence. In jīva, i.e. the animated ones, there are two qualities — sat (Existence) and cit (Consciousness) and in antaryāmin (three qualities, viz., sat, cit and ānanda). If the quality cit is developed in the jaḍa, it becomes animate and with the infusion of ānanda, it becomes antaryāmin. Vallabha is more liberal than Rāmānuja.

By creating the world out of himself, He (the Lord) transforms himself as jīva and jagat, like gold transformed into an ornament. This līlā (sport) on His part involves no change and hence it is called avikṛta-pariṇāma-vāda. The relations between the Lord and the world are both non-different (ananya) as effect (created world) is included in the kāraṇa (Cause). This is called satkārya-vāda. Impartiality of the Lord and the doctrine of Grace or getting mokṣa are common to other sects. He regards Kṛṣṇa Himself is bhagavān, but for removing internal agonies of people, he incarnates as Datta, Kapila, etc. For removing external calamities, he takes avatāras like Divine Fish, Man-lion, etc. When He inspires persons for a particular purpose, that is known as āvirbhāva. And as pointed out by him in TDN, III. 1.49 the āvirbhāvas are equivalent to regular avatāras.

We must give credit to Vallabhācārya inviting our attention to the concept of akṣara Brahman. According to Vallabhācārya, akṣara Brahman is distinct from the para Brahman and individual souls emanate from Him like sparks from fire. It is due to the Will of the Lord that, with diminished Bliss (gaṇitānanda), the akṣara Brahman seems to assume the following four forms:

- (1) Prakṛti and Puruṣa, the cause of everything.
- (2) Kāla (Time) — It is all-pervasive and the cause of disturbing the equilibrium of guṇas of prakṛti.
- (3) Karma — Action, Universal, manifesting itself in different actions.
- (4) Svabhāva — Producer of change (pariṇāmu-hetutva). Akṣara Brahman contains within himself millions of worlds. As a spiritual form of the para Brahman, akṣara Brahman incarnates as puruṣa. It is by the upāsana (Adoration or bhakti) of akṣara Brahman that jñānins (the knowers of spirituality) become one with the supreme ātman.

Vallabhācārya holds that individual souls are atomic, eternal, uncreated, Brahman — like, but with Bliss slightly diminished. They are both the Agents and Enjoyers of the fruits of their karmans. Hence, God is neither cruel nor partial, when He dispenses the fruits. Vallabhācārya rejects the theory of adṛṣṭa.

According to Vāilabhācārya the jagat is the ādhibhautika aspect of the Brahman. It is the manifestation of the Brahman causing no vikāra (Change) in Him (avikṛta-pariṇāma vāda). The Brahman (A Reality) is the cause of the world. And so there is no difference between Cause and the Effect (abhinna-nimittopādāna-kāraṇa), the world is real. The jagat (different from the ephemeral prapañca) is identical with the Brahman with conscious-ness and bliss-aspect temporarily obscured.

To be fair to others, we must acknowledge the fact that some of the doctrines of Vallabhācārya were prevalent before Vallabhācārya. Thus Brahman's possession of attributes, the world as transformation of the Brahman, synthesis of jñāna and karma (jñāna-karma-samuccaya), the concept of bhakti, the necessity of Divine Grace for Liberation, the need for complete surrender to God (prapatti), to mention a few, were already current before Vallabhācārya.

Dr. G.H. Bhatta summarises the exact contribution of Vallabhācārya as follows:

The doctrine of non-dualism, the conception of God as full of deliciousness (rasa) and joy, coexistence of contradictory attributes in Brahman, the idea of AKṢARA BRAHMAN, the theory of the creation of the world from the very form (svarūpa) of Brahman, the transformation of the Brahman into the world without suffering any change, self-dedication to the Lord, emphasis on God's Grace and the aesthetic and emotional form of devotion, are the special features of Vallabha's teaching.

— History of Philosophy Eastern and Western, Vol. I, p. 356

Is the teaching of Vallabhācārya relevant to the modern world? Yes, positively yes. His strong refutation of the demoralising concept of the illusory nature of the world inspired his followers for zest in life. His teaching elevated the life of all sections of the society — a democratic outlook embracing all castes and communities. As G.H. Bhatta notes: "Painting, Music, Sanskrit, Hindi and Gujarati literature flourished under the inspiration of Vallabha's teaching." His message of bhakti-karma-samuccaya (Synthesis of bhakti and Action) will certainly give solace and guidance to moderns distraught with nerve-racking tensions and frustrations.

Appendix I

Puṣṭi Bhakti

It was a glorious period for the bhakti Movement. In addition to Vallabha, we find Madhusūdana Sarasvatī and Gaurāṅga Prabhu Caitanya propagating the bhakti Cult in their own light. Vallabhācārya the exponent of Śuddhādvaita, wrote his famous tracts such as Puṣṭi-pravāha-maryādā-bheda, Śrī-Kṛṣṇāśraya, Siddhānta-rahasya and the like. Madhusūdana Sarasvatī, the staunch advocate of Kevalādvaita, the author of the famous work Advaita-siddhi wrote the Bhakti-rasāyana. Curiously enough Vallabha and Madhusūdana Sarasvatī, the advocate of rival schools of philosophy, were both devotees of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and personal friends. Gaurāṅga Prabhu Caitanya, the exponent of Acintya-bhedābheda did not write any treatise but his disciples like Śrī Rūpa Goswāmī, Sanātana Goswāmī and their disciples of Gauḍīya Vaiṣṇava School richly contributed to bhakti literature by works like Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, Hari-bhakti Vilāsa to mention a few.

In Puṣṭi-pravāha-maryādā-bheda, Vallabhācārya classified souls in three categories:<sup>1</sup> (1) Pravāha, (2) Maryādā, (3) Puṣṭi.<sup>2</sup>

- (1) Pravāha souls are ordinary persons who are involved in the cycle of births and deaths.
- (2) Maryādā souls observe the Vedic paths with all the prescriptions of duties.
- (3) Puṣṭi bhaktas are the favoured few who are elected by the Lord in order to shower His grace on them, for which no humanly ostensible reason can be seen. The puṣṭi bhaktas may observe prescribed religious duties, but it is not binding on them.<sup>3</sup> This doctrine of Election is a special feature of Vallabha's system. Devotees of puṣṭi type have got natural love for God. They do everything for Lord Kṛṣṇa. The special feature of puṣṭi bhakti is that, Love for the Lord is the starting point, while in maryādā bhakti, Love for the Lord has to be generated by means of bhakti of ninefold path (e.g., meditation, worship, etc.). The puṣṭi bhakta is already beyond such attempts as they have Love for God from the beginning. A puṣṭi bhakta realises his helplessness and throws himself completely at the feet of the Lord dedicating not only himself but all his belongings, and ignores the duties prescribed by Dharma-Śāstra for his Class (varṇa) and Stage in life (āśrama).

As puṣṭi bhakti of the standard of Gopīs of Vṛndāvana is not possible nowadays (even in Vallabha's Period), Vallabhācārya proposes the doctrine of prapatti (complete surrender to the will of the Lord):<sup>4</sup> All persons irrespective of class or nationality can reach the goal by sustaining throughout the whole life, the spirit of self-surrender and resignation to the Will of the Lord. Vallabhācārya, is however, opposed to the manner of renunciation of Monistic saṁnyāsa. In the bhakti mārga renunciation proceeds out of the necessity for proper maintenance of the bhakti mārga and NOT as a matter of duty.

The fourth type of bhakti is śuddha bhakti. These bhaktas have boundless love for God, like gopīs of Vṛndāvana and they are rare.

The concept of puṣṭi bhakti is a special contribution of Vallabha and is fascinating to all.

Notes

1. पुष्टि-प्रवाह-मर्यादा विशेषेण पृथक् पृथक्।
जीव-देह-क्रिया-भेदः प्रवाहेण फलेन च॥
— पुष्टि-प्रवाह-मर्यादा-भेद, 1
2. पोषणं तदनुग्रहः।
— भागवतपुराण, 3.10.4
अनुग्रहरूपो भगवद्भर्तुः पुष्टिः।
— प्रमेय रत्नार्णव

Appendix I

3. यदा यस्यानुगृह्णाति भगवान्नात्मभावितः।
स जहाति मतिं लोके वेदे च परिनिष्ठिताम्॥
— भागवत, 4.2.6
भगवन्तारतप्येन तारतम्यं भजन्ति हि।
लौकिकत्वं वैदिकत्वं कापटयात् तेषु शान्यथा॥ (apparently)
— पुष्टि प्रवाह मार्गभेद, 20
4. ऐहिके पारलोके च सर्वथा शरणं हरिः।
दुःखहानी तथा पापे भये कामाद्य-पूरणे॥
— विवेकश्रियाश्रय निरूपण, 10

Appendix II

Verses attributed to Viṣṇusvāmin

VALLABHĀCĀRYA expresses his allegiance to Viṣṇusvāmī of Kāñci, though he was not a direct disciple of the founder of his school. Biographical information about Viṣṇusvāmī is given in supra p. 56. The following is a free translation of the verses attributed to Viṣṇusvāmī. It will enable readers to take a comparative view of the philosophy of Viṣṇusvāmī and that of Vallabhācārya.

(1) Verses quoted by Śrīdhara in his Commentary. on the Bhāgavata 1.7.5 & 6<sup>1</sup>

1. The Lord is veritable sat (Existence), cit (Consciousness) and ānanda (Bliss) incarnate. He is embraced by his saṁvit power called hlādinī (Delightgiver), while jīva (Individual soul) enmeshed in his nescience (avidyā) is a mine of miseries.
- 2-3. The Lord has māyā under his control, while the jīva is one who is harassed by her. In Him (Kṛṣṇa) the Supreme Bliss is manifest, while the jīva is the experiencer of miseries since his inception (manifestation as jīva). Due to avidyā the jīva has his intelligence spoiled since times immemorial. Being deluded by māyā, he entertains difference-proneness and thereby he is affected with fear and misery. We praise Lord Nṛhari (Man-Lion)

The following four more verses are attributed to Viṣṇusvāmin<sup>2</sup>:

1. Comparing the jīvātman (individual soul) and the Brahman men are exhorted to resort to the Lord.

The jivāman (the individual soul) is aṇu (atom). It is separate in every individual and has a very meagre knowledge (alpajñā). He is the servant of the feet of Hari. Lord Kṛṣṇa is free from all blemishes and is as if a 'flood' of all excellent qualities. He is constituted of consciousness and Bliss. He is the father of god Brahmā. O men, take resort unto Him who is full of mercy.

2. Viṣṇusvāmī describes the greatness of Lord and advises men to resort to Him. The verse is a description of the Lord:

The Lord is a limitless, unfathomable ocean of mercy. He transports jīvas across the ocean of saṁsāra. He is a support unto people who bow to Him with their heads. He is always accessible through devotion. He is ever-ready to confer grace on persons who are lovingly devoted to Him. The Son of Nanda (Lord Kṛṣṇa), who is served by gods, is constituted of consciousness and Bliss. Take resort unto Him.

3. This verse expresses the strong desire of Viṣṇusvāmī to visualize the Lord: There is no philosophical point for discussion but a craving to see the Lord:

When can I see Kṛṣṇa in the lap of Yośodā or frisking in the presence of Nanda, the Chief of Vraja.

When can I see Him playing delightfully with all his friends (including his brother Balarāma) on the bank of the Yamunā (lit. the daughter of the Sun-god).

4. Viṣṇusvāmī expresses regrets towards the aversion of men to the Lord by whose grace the curtain of māyā is removed and God becomes manifest:

People of asura (demon-like) mentality do not know you (O Lord) though you are so well-known in all Śāstras. Your māyā makes them (revolve) wander excessively through the cycle of births and death.

But those who are yours, (your devotees) are full of love for you, can visualize you directly with ease, as the curtain of māyā is automatically removed.

The Following Traditional Verse is said to sum up Viṣṇusvāmi's Teaching<sup>3</sup>:

1. In the opinion (school) of Viṣṇusvāmi, Kṛṣṇa is Brahman itself constituting sat (existence) and cit (consciousness). He manifests Himself in Gokula out of Pure Free Will.

Service unto Kṛṣṇa (the enemy of demon Madhu) is said to be mukti (Liberation). His grace helps to attain it (mukti). Followers of Hari become free from (devoid of) avidyā. The world is real and one with the Brahman.

(The last sentence is noted as "avikṛta-pariṇāma-vāda of Śuddhādvaitism".)

Notes

1. Verses quoted by Śrīdhara in his Commentary. on the Bhāgavata Purāna, I.7.516

- (1) ह्लादिन्या सविदाभिलष्टः सच्चिदानन्द ईश्वरः।
स्वाविद्यासंवृतो जीवः संक्लेशनिकराकरः॥
- (2) स ईशां यद्गुणे माया स जीवो यस्तयार्दितः।
स्वाविर्भूतपरानन्दः स्वाविर्भूतसुदःख भूः॥
- (3) स्वाद्गुत्य विपर्यास-भवभेदजभीशुचः ।
यन्मायया जुधन्नास्ते तमिमं नृहरिं नुभः॥

2. Four more verses Traditionally attributed to Viṣṇusvāmi

- (1) अणुं जीवात्मानं हरिचरणदासं न जननम्।
विभिन्नं जानीत प्रतितनु सङ्गानाशविभवम्॥
चिदानन्दाकारं ब्रजपतिकुमारं क-जनकम्।
गुणौघं निर्दोषं भजत मनुजा ब्रह्म सदयम्॥
- (2) कृपापारावारं भवजलधिपारं सुखकरम्।
जनानामाधारं प्रणतशिरसा शान्त-मनसाम्॥
सदा भक्त्या लभ्यं प्रणयपरयानुग्रहपरम् ।
चिदानन्दं नन्दात्मजममरसेव्यं श्रयतभोः।

Brahma-Vāda

कदा बालं कृष्णं सखिभिरखिलैः साग्रजमहम् ।
मिलित्वा खेलन्तं तरणितनयोरोधसि मुदा ॥
यशोदायाः क्रोडे ब्रजपतिपुरः क्वापि ललितम् ।
विराजं राजन्तं नयनपथमाप्तास्मि समुदम् ॥
न जानन्त्येव त्वामसुरमतयः शास्त्रविदितम् ।
त्वदीया माया तान् भ्रमयति नितान्तं ब्रजपते ॥
त्वदीयास्वामेव प्रणयभरणीधित्यमनसो ।
निरीक्षन्ते साक्षात् त्वदपगतमायाजवनिका ॥

A traditional Verse summarising Viṣṇusvāmīn's Teaching

विष्णुस्वामि-मते ब्रजेशतनयः श्रीब्रह्मसङ्घन्मयः ।
शुद्धेच्छावशतो जनाननुगतः प्रादुर्भवत् गोकुले ॥
मुक्तिर्दास्यमितीरितं मधुरिपोस्तत्साधकोऽनुग्रहः ।
स्वाविद्यारहिता हरेरनुचरा ब्रह्मात्मकं सज्जगत् ॥

Source: श्रीमद्वल्लभाचार्य-व्यक्तकित्त्व सिद्धान्त और सन्देश डॉ.
गजाननशर्मा विरचित, pp. 41-47
वैष्णव मित्रमंडल, इंदौर द्वारा प्रकाशित, 1981.

Bibliography

- Abhinavagupta, Tantra-sāra, Kashmir Sanskrit Series (KSS), Srinagar, 1918,
- , Tantrāloka (with Jayaratha's commentary), KSS.
- Ali, S.M., The Geography of the Purāṇas, Bombay, Peoples Publishing House, 1973.
- Bhāgavad Gītā*, (with 18 commentaries) Gujarathi Printing Press, Bombay.
- Bhāgavata Purāṇa* (with 15 commentaries) Bhāgavata Vidyapīṭha, Ahmedabad.
- Dasgupta, S.N., History of Indian Philosophy, Vol. IV, Delhi, Motilal Banarsidass.
- Dhruva, B.M., An Introduction to the Śuddhādvaita School of Philosophy of Śrī Vallabhācārya (self-published) 1950.
- Gauḍapāda, Māṇḍūkya Kārikā.
- Giridhara, Śuddhādvaita Mārtaṇḍa.
- Hastings, Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics.
- History and Culture of Indian People*, Vol. Delhi Sultanate, Bombay, Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan.
- Karamarkar, R.D., Rāmānuja's Śrī Bhāṣya (with English translation), Pune, University of Pune, 1964.
- Madhvācārya, Com. on the Brahma Sūtra (with Tattva-prakāśikā) with Marāṭhī translation by Rangacarya Raddi, Pune, 1949.
- Pagdi, Sethumadhavrao, Sūfi Sampradāya (Marāṭhī).
- Pande, K.C., Abhinavagupta: An Historical and Philosophical Study, Chowkhambha Sanskrit Series, Banaras, 1963.

- , Bhāskari, Vols. I-III, Lucknow University.
- Patañjali, Vyākaraṇa Mahābhāṣya, Keilhorn.
- Phatak, N.R., Eknāth: Vāṅmāyā and Kārya (Marāṭhī).
- Purāṇas, Gurumaṇḍala editions, Calcutta.
- Radhakrishnan, S., Brahma Sūtra (Translation exposition, etc.)
London, George Allen & Unwin, 1960.
- , (ed.), History of Pilosophy, Eastern and Western, Vol. I,
London, George Allen & Unwin, 1967.
- Śaṅkarācārya, Śāriraka Bhāṣya on the Brahma Sūtras, Bombay, Nirnaya Sagar Press, 1904.
- Sharma, Gajanan, Srimad Vallabhācārya-Vyaktitva aur Sandesh (Hindī), 1981.
- Smṛtis, Gurumaṇḍala editions. Calcutta.
- Śrikanṭha, Brahma Mimāṃsā Bhāṣya, Ed. Halasyanath Shastri, Kumbhakonam, Vol. I, 1908, Vol. II, 1918.
- Srinivasachari, P.N., Philosophy of Bhedābheda, Madras, 1950.
- Śripati Paṇḍit, Śrīkara Bhāṣya on the Brahma Sūtras, ed. by Hayavadanrao, Bangalore, 1937.
- Surya Narayana Shastri, Śivādvaita of Śrikanṭha, Madras, Madras University, 1930, 1952.
- Tagare, G.V., Śaiva-darshan (Marāṭhī), Pune, Continental, 1987.
- , Śiva-Sūtra of Vasugupta (Marāṭhī) Impressions, Belgaum, 1996.
- Upaniṣat-saṅgraha*, J.L., Shastri, Delhi, Motilal Banarasidass, 1970.
- Vallabhācārya, All works of Vallabhācārya (used here) are published by Vallabha Vidyapeeth, Kolhapur.
- , Aṅubhāṣya on the Brahma Sūtras, Vols. I-V.
- , Patrāvalāmbana, V.S. 2052.
- , Ṣoḍaśa Granthas, Vols. I-II.
- , Tattvārtha-dīpa-nibandha, Vols. I-III.
- Vedas, Text as published by Svādhyāya Maṇḍal, Aundh.

Glossary of Sanskrit Terms

Abhinna-nimittopādāna-kāraṇa
— The doctrine that Brahman, the cause of the world is non-differentiated Instrumental-material cause. As the cause, the Brahman is real, the world is real.

Abhivyakti — manifestation

Ādhibhautika — pertaining to bhūtas (gross elements). For example, Vallabha regards the world as the ādhibhautika form of the Brahman. This is the third grade or aspect of the Brahman.

Ādhidāivika — The first grade of the Brahman.

The Para Brahman parexcellence or Kṛṣṇa or Puruṣottama according to Vallabha.

Adhikaraṇa — A section of a Sūtra work. It consists of five factors: Viśaya (subject-matter), Viśaya (doubt)

Pūrva-pakṣa (statement of objection), Siddhānta (established decision), San̄gati (connection with other sections).

Ādhyātmika — second grade of Brahman: The akṣara Brahman.

Adṛṣṭa — The effect of the past karmas unseen in the present birth. This is the theory proposed by Mīmāṃsakas.

Advaita — non-difference, identity between the Brahman, individual soul and the world. (Śāṅkara's theory: Kevalādvaita).

Advayavāda — The full term 'īśvarādvayavāda' — Parama-śiva is non-different from individual souls and the world. The term is used in Kāśmīr Śaivism.

Antaryāmin — the Principle dwelling in finite souls.

Apūrva — the (prospective) fruit of a religious act.

Asparśa Yoga — Gauḍapāda's term for Advaita Vedānta.

Asura-vyāmoha lilā — A term in Puṣṭi mārga for Vallabhācārya's Samādhi.

A-vikṛta-parināmavāda — The doctrine that no change (vikāra) occurs when the Brahman becomes many and manifested Himself as the world.

Āvirbhāva — manifestation (creation) of the world as against tirobhāva (or pralaya) which is obscuration of the world. The world is not destroyed. It is manifested and concealed or withdrawn within God.

Bheda — difference. Bheda-pratyakṣa — difference between God and the soul is a matter of experience according to Vaisnava and Śaiva (Siddhānta Śaiva) dualists.

Bhedābheda — The doctrine of difference-cum-non-difference between God and the world. This doctrine was promulgated by Audulomi and later endorsed by Bhāskara.

Brahma-samavāyīkāraṇa — Brahman as the samavāyī cause of the world.

Cit — consciousness. The characteristic of the animate world. Sat-cit-ānanda are the constituents of the Brahman. Kāśmīrī Śaivas use the term cidānanda, for they say that without sat (existence), the next two cit and ānanda are impossible.

Dharma — a quality.

Dharma — a religion.

Dharma-sabhā — A conference of paṇḍits (Sanskrit scholars) to discuss some religious topic.

Dharma-śāstra — codes of behaviour, law, Smṛti works.

Dharma-sāstra-kāra — author of works on Dharma Śāstra, originally applied to the authors of Smṛti works. Later extended to qualified scholars who gave decisions on social and religious problems.

Dharmin — possessor of quality.

Dvaita — The doctrine that regards God or Brahman, individual souls and the world are different inter se. This was held both by followers of Madhva and Śaiva Siddhāntins.

Jaḍa — non-sentients, matter.

Jiva, Jivātman — the individual soul.

Kāraṇa — cause, source.

Laya — merger. BrSū, 4.2.1 states that vāk (power of speech) merges in the mind. Rāmānuja interprets here laya as 'association' while Śāṅkara says it is ṛtti-laya 'merging' as the power of speech and not svarūpa-laya — a view endorsed by Śrīkaṇṭha.

Mahāvākya — The great statement, the essence of the Veda, e.g. tat tvam asi which is interpreted as "Thou are that" i.e. Brahman.

Mauñjī bandhana or Upanayana — A ceremony to initiate a vaiśya communities were eligible for this ceremony. After the performance of the ceremony, the boys were called dviyas (twice-born ones).

The ceremony is called Upanayana as the boy is 'brought near to' i.e. entrusted to the teacher for education.

Mantra — sacred formula or letters of esoteric nature. For example om namaḥ śivāya for Śaivas, śrīkṛṣṇaḥ śaraṇa mana for followers of Vallabha; some Śākta mantras begin with unintelligible syllables om hrām hrīm etc.

Māyā — Illusion. Illusive power of God. Māyā is supposed to delude men away from the to Nāgārjuna's concept of Reality but it is not the same as Nāgārjuna's.

Nibandha-kāras — Writers on digests on topics in Dharmaśāstra. These digests are mainly based on Smṛti works.

Nimitta-kāraṇa — Instrumental cause.

Pradeśa — a span — Dimension of the Brahman accommodated in the span-limited space of the heart.

Prakāśa — Knowledge — Paramśiva is both prkāśa and vimarśa (power).

Pralaya — Withdrawal of the world within God. The world is thus destroyed at the end of a kalpa.

Pramā — True knowledge.

Pramāṇa — Valid means of knowledge — the unfailing source of true knowledge (according to Nyāya-Vaiśeṣikas).

Number of Pramāṇas (according to schools of Philosophy): (1) Cārvākas — Pratyakṣa (perception); (2) Vaiśeṣikas : (a) Pratyakṣa and (b) Anumāna (Inference); (3) Sāṃkhya : add the 3rd

pramāṇa (c) Śabda (testimony); (4) Naiyāyikas : (i) Pratyakṣa (ii) anumāna (iii) Upamāna (comparison, Analogy), śabda; (5) Bhaṭṭa Mīmāṃsaka's add: arthāpatti (initial doubt); (6) Kumārila Bhaṭṭa adds anupalabdhi (non-perception) as the sixth pramāṇa.

These can be reduced to three pramāṇas: (1) pratyakṣa — to include pratyakṣa and anupalabdhi; (2) anumāna — to include anumāna, upamāna and arthāpatti; (3) śabda.

Prameya — The Ultimate Reality ascertained by pramāṇas, the Brahman, Kṛṣṇa (according to Vallabha).

Prasthāna — 'Foundation' — The basic texts, the foundation of philosophy.

They consist of : (1) Ancient Upaniṣads (some ten in number); (2) The Bhagavad Gītā; (3) The Brahma Sūtra.

To these Vallabha adds : (4) The Bhāgavata Purāṇa, especially its samādhi bhāṣā.

Pūrva-mīmāṃsā — Mīmāṃsā Sūtras were once regarded as one text. The first part is called Pūrvamīmāṃsā. It deals with the sacrificial ritual. Jaimini is regarded as the author of these sūtras. It is also a philosophical work. Jaimini's followers Kumārila Bhaṭṭa and Prabhākara Bhaṭṭa founded their own schools. The special contribution of this school is the formulation of logical rules of exact interpretations. These canons were accepted by modern courts to interpret Law.

Puṣṭi mārga — The special form of bhakti introduced by Vallabhācārya. It is the doctrine of election by Kṛṣṇa or God of His bhaktas. Such favoured bhaktas are called puṣṭi bhaktas.

Siddha — 'One who has accomplished the highest spiritual wisdom'. In the post-Mahāyāna period, sects of siddhas claiming super-natural powers arose amongst Buddhists, Śaivas and Śāktas. Due to their claim to super-natural powers, they wielded great influence on the masses. With the exception of yogis like Matsyendranāth, Gorakhnāth who have contributed to Yogic literature, most of the so-called siddhas were privileged beggars. Hazari Prasad Dwivedi's Nāth sāmpradāya and Dharmavira Bharati's siddha sādhitya evaluate the positive contribution of the siddhas to Indian culture.

Smṛti — Ancient law-books of Hindus. They are written by a number of sages like Manu, Yājñavalkya et al.

Śruti — Vedic literature consisting of Vedas, Brāhmaṇas, Āraṇyakas and Upaniṣads (old strata).

Soul — see subject-index.

Svatantra : Independent of any external help — can create or destroy the world at one's Free Will.

Tantra (also called Āgama) — Esoteric works guiding performance of secret rites for attaining siddhi. (Some spiritual powers or vision of the deity.) The Tantras were written by Buddhist, Śaiva and Śākta writers. The obnoxious practices of some Tantra-followers made them unpopular with decent people. Tantra practitioners still have a hold on the masses.

Upādāna kāraṇa — The material cause.

Upanayana — see Mauñjī bandhana.

Upaniṣads — Ancient philosophical works of Hindus. They are intimate discourses between a teacher and a pupil or father and his son. They constitute the last part of Śruti Texts.

Varṇa — One of the four divisions of ancient Hindu society. Varṇas are four in number: brāhmaṇa, kṣatriya, vaiśya and śūdra. Varṇa is a wider term than 'caste'.

Vijñānavāda — The Buddhist doctrine that denies real existence to the world. It is the ideational existence of objects in our mind that we call the world.

Vivarta-vāda — 'Vivarta' means 'apparent modification'. The world is only 'apparent modification' of the Brahman. The Brahman is thus the ultimate reality. BrSū, II 3.50 and, III.2 16 support the vivarta vāda (the world as an apparent modification of the Brahman) and not pariṇāma vāda (the actual modification of the Brahman).

Viśiṣṭādvaita — The doctrine that recognizes the distinction between cit (sentients) and acit (non-sentients) but regards both as parts of God's person. The theory which regards both sentients (cit) and the non-sentient (acit) as parts of God's person. The theory was popularized by Rāmānuja.

Viśva-maya — Immanent in the Universe.

Viśvottīrṇa — Transcendent to the Universe.

Subject-Index

(figures after a subtopic represent page numbers)

Akṣara Brahman : Vallabhācārya's special contribution 67; Three grades of Brahman 67; Concept of Akṣara Brahman—lower grade than Kṛṣṇa or Para Brahman—slight obscuration of Bliss 68; Epithets of the Akṣara Brahman 67, 68; From Akṣara Brahman individual souls (jīvātmans) emanate 68; Through the Will of the Para Brahman, Akṣara Brahman assumes the forms of (1) akṣara, (2) kāla, (3) karma, and (4) svabhāva 68, 69; Akṣara Brahman superior to Prakṛti and Puruṣa 69; Akṣara Brahman contains millions of worlds 69; As the spiritual form of Para Brahman, Akṣara Brahman incarnates as Puruṣa 69;

Akṣara Brahman an object of meditation and upāsanā 69; Differences with other Vaiṣṇava Schools 69, 70; Vallabha regards no difference between jaḍa, jīva and the Brahman. With development of cit and ānanda, jaḍa becomes Brahman, so does jīva after developing the bliss aspect 93.

Brahma Vāda : Fundamentals of Brahma Vāda 8-9; concept of Brahma Vāda 55; Brahma Vāda and Māyāvāda, Bhāskara wrongly accuses Śaṅkara 55, 56; Advaita and Śuddhādvaita 56; Brahma Vāda emphasizes the oneness of jaḍa, jīva and antaryāmin 61, 92; Madhva differs 62; Brahma Vāda—

The Brahman as the abhinna-nimittapādāna-kāraṇa of the jagat 86; As Brahman is real so is the Jagat.

The Deity : Para Brahman or Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the Ultimate Reality 59; synonyms of Kṛṣṇa, Supreme Brahman, Paramātmā, Bhagavān Yajña, Avatārin (one who takes avatāras or incarnations) 59; Kṛṣṇa as Supreme Brahman characterised by being Himself sat (existence), cit (consciousness) and ānanda (Bliss) 59; Repository of contradictory qualities such as saguṇa and nirguṇa, with form (sākāra) and formless (nirākāra) 60, 61, 62; concept summarised in Bhāgavata 60; the Brahman both material cause and the instrumental cause of the world — No māyā necessary. Hence the reality of the world 61; Śaṅkara's Brahman inactive, avidyā's association necessary for world creation. Hence the world mithyā 61; Rāmānuja: cit (conscious beings) and acit (jaḍa) parts of God's person — jaḍa, eternally jaḍa 61.

Madhva's concept of the Deity — the Brahman, the instrumental cause and prakṛti the material cause of the world 62; World created due to God's volition — Will to be many — He manifested as jīva and jagat without undergoing change (avikṛta-pariṇāma-vāda) — a līlā 62; Relation between the Lord and World, ananya — No mithyātva 62; Impartiality of God — Fruits are dispensed as per men's karmas — only puṣṭi bhaktas favoured 62, 63; If everything — soul, laws, karmas and their fruits — are forms of God, no partiality possible 63.

Doctrine of Grace — Makṣa impossible without Lord's grace (anugraha) 63; Doctrine of Upaniṣadic antiquity — Puṣṭi-mārga the best path to mokṣa 63.

The Doctrine of Avatāra 63 — for relieving miseries of the world, (ii) for agonies of samsāra, (iii) Temporary, for specific purpose (āvīrbhāva) 64; Kṛṣṇa not an avatāra (incarnation) but avatārin — the source of avatāras 69.

BrSū identifies the Brahman with Vaiśvānara, Dahara, Akṣara, Ākāśa 64; Evolution of Indian Philosophical Thought (see also Bhagavad Gītā, Brahma Sūtra) Vedic inquisitiveness about God 13; Theistic and Atheistic Thought currents 14; Theistic thought-currents: (i) The Thing (God), Man and the world intrinsically the same (Advaita), (ii) God, individual souls and the world essentially different (Dvaita), (iii) Sentients though different from non-sentients form a part of God's person (Viśiṣṭādvaita); 14: These currents common to Śaivas and Vaiṣṇavas 15; comparison of Dualistic School of Vaiṣṇavism (Madhva) and Siddhānta Śaivism (Dualistic Śaiva School) 15, 16; Śāṅkara's Monism different from the Monism of Kāśmīr Śaivas 16; Vallabhācārya's

Jagat (the world) 85-89: Jagat emanated from Brahman, so real 85; Jagat different from saṁsāra which is transient 85; jagat — perceptible, so Vijñānavādin's ideational concept about jagat wrong 85; Vallabha's refutation of Vijñānavāda 86, Brahman the abhinnopādānakāraṇa of the jagat. As the cause is real, so is the effect, the jagat 86; Jagat, a play of Kṛṣṇa wherein He assumes name and form 86; The Brahman — the material and the efficient cause of the world 86; Brahman a samavāyīkāraṇa of the jagat 87; jagat is not the vikāra but a transformation — avikṛta-pariṇāma of the Brahman 87, 88, 94; Manifestation and disappearance of jagat the from Akṣara Brahman like sparks from fire 73; Attributes of the soul — consciousness, size, atomic due to (1) movement out of the body, (2) caitanya-guṇa — pervasive all over the body not totally identical with the Brahman 74-76; Bliss (ānanda) inherent in the soul 76; The soul as kartā (Agent) and bhoktā (Enjoyer) 76-77; soul's dependence on the Brahman 77; God, occasional cause to grant fruit of karmas 77; Relation between the Individual Soul and the Brahman 77-78; Jiva an aṁśa (part) of the Brahman 78; The Brahman not affected by the faults of the jīva 78-79; Individual souls different, hence no confusion in distribution fruits of karmas

79; Adṛṣṭa Theory rejected 79-80; Prescription (vidhi) and prohibition (niṣedha) of acts applicable to the bodies of jīvas 79; the jīva becomes Brahman by developing ānanda (Bliss) aspect 92; summary of the characteristics of jīvas according to Vallabha 80-81.

Puṣṭi Bhakti — A special contribution of Vallabha.

Three categories of souls — pravāha, maryādā, and puṣṭi 95; characteristics of puṣṭi bhakta 96; suddha bhaktas — boundless love for God like gopis 96

Prasthānas : Three standard works: (1) Upaniṣads, (2) The Bhagavad Gītā (3) The Brahma Sūtra 19, 21, 22.

General Index

- Abhinavagupta — Kāśmīri Śaiva philosopher, 16, 20, 63
- abhidhyā* — volition, 86
- adyṣṭa* — unseen effect of karma, 81
- Aitareya Upaniṣad*, 85
- ajātivāda* — Gaudapāda's theory about the world, 43
- Anubhāṣya* (on BrSū), 17, 27, 28, 45-47, 58, 59, 62, 68, 73-79, 85-88
- Āśmarathya — A pre-Brahma Sūtra teacher, 26-28
- Ātreya — a pre-Brahma Sūtra teacher, 29
- Auḍulomi — a pre-Brahma Sūtra teacher, 29-30
- Avatāra* — Doctrine of, 63, 64
- Bādari — a pre-Brahma Sūtra teacher, 31-33
- Bhadra Varsa — N. China, 1
- Bhagavad Gītā*, 20, 63, 78, 87, 91
- Bhāmati* — Vācaspati Miśra's commentary on Śaṅkara's commentary on the BrSū
- Bhāskara — a commentator on the BrSū. 47, 48
- Bhatta, G.H. — an author in History of Philosophy Eastern and Western, 94
- Bhāvaviveka or Bhavya — a Buddhist philosopher, 45
- Bodhāyana — an early commentator on Brahma (Śārīraka) Sūtra, 21
- Brahman* — the concept of, 60, 61, 64
- Brahma-Sūtra* or Brahma Mimāṃsā or Bādarāyaṇa Sūtra or Śārīraka Sūtra, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20-26, 27, 28, 31-35, 36, 37, 46, 52, 55, 61, 64, 68, 73, 78-80, 85, 86, 87
- Bṛhadāranyaka Upaniṣad*, 21, 28, 77
- Bṛhat-saṃhitā* of Varāhamihira — an ancient encyclopaedia, 1

- Chāndogya Upaniṣad*, 17, 18, 19, 27, 29, 31, 33, 75, 85-87
- Dānādhyakṣa* — Officer-in-charge of the department of royal donations and gifts, 6
- Dasgupta, S.N. — History of Indian Philosophy, 42
- Deussen, Paul — The System of the Vedānta, 55
- Gauḍapāda — a pre-Śankara Advaita Vedānta teacher. He calls his theory Asparsā Yoga — author of Māṇḍūkya kārikās, 41-43
- Giridhara — author of Śuddhādvaita Mārtaṇḍa, 56
- Grace, the doctrine of 63
- Introduction to the Śuddhādvaita School of Philosophy of Śrī Vallabhācārya* by B.M. Dhruva, 67, 68
- Jacobi H. on Māyā, 55
- Jains — Śvetāmbara and Digambara sects, 18
- Jizya* — tax levied by Muslim rulers on Hindus for permission to stay in their own ancestral homes
- Jaimini — a pre-Brahma Sūtra teacher, 33-36
- Kali Age*, 3
- Kārsnājini — a pre-Brahma Sūtra teacher, 32-36
- Kāśakṛtsna or Kāśakṛtsni — a pre-Brahma Sūtra teacher, 36, 37
- Kaṭha Upaniṣad*, 63, 79
- Kauṣītaki Upaniṣad*, 74, 75, 77
- Kṛṣṇa — the Ultimate Reality; Brahman (mentioned all through the book. Hence no pages given)
- Madhva — Vaiṣṇava exponent of the philosophy of Dualism (Dvaita)
- Mahadevan T.M.P. — Gauḍapāda, A Study in Advaita Vedānta, 42
- Māṇḍūkya Kārikā of Gauḍapāda*, 42
- Meru* — a mythological mountain, now identified with The Pamir, 1
- Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad*, 63, 79
- Nāgārjuna — A Buddhist philosopher — exponent of Śūnyavāda, 44, 46
- Nāgara Khaṇḍa* — A section (khaṇḍa) of the Skanda Purāṇa, 1
- Nilā — a mythological mountain — now identified with the

- mountain chain of Zarafshan
— Tienshan, 1
- Padmapāda — a commentator on Śaṅkara's Bhāṣya on BrSū
- Pāñcarātra Āgama*, 29, 30
- Patrāvalambana* — a work of Vallabhācārya, 10
- Prabhāsa Khaṇḍa* — a section of the Skanda Purāṇa, 1
- Pramāṇas*, 57, 59
- Pre-Vallabha Vedānta Teachers :
(1) Gaudapāda, 41-43; (2)
Śaṅkara, 17, 43-46; (3)
Bhāskara, 47-48; (4) Rāmānuja, 32, 48-50; (5) Madhva,
50-51; (6) Śrikanṭha, 51-52;
(7) Śrīpati Paṇḍit, 52-53
- Radhkrishnan, S., 46, 54, 68
- Rāmānuja — exponent of Viśiṣṭādvaita — a theist, author of Śrībhāṣya on BrSū and other works, strong emphasis on bhakti and prapatti (complete submission to God), 32, 48, 50
- Ṛgveda* — X.187. 7 — Nāsadīya
Sūkta, 13
- Roy, S. — Heritage of Śaṅkara, 42
- samavāya* — inseparable inherent relation as between cloth and threads. Such a cause is samavāyī kāraṇa — material cause, 87
- Śakti-saṅgama Tantra* — A
Tantra work
- samādhi bhāṣā* — meditational speech in BhP, 58-59
- Śaṅkara — the exponent of Kevalādvaita — of Vaiṣṇava tradition (2) Date, 43-47; The Ultimate Reality, 44,
Individual soul, the Brahman, 45; not a Māyā-vādin, doctrine of māyā different from Nāgājuna's 45-46; Theory of Vivarta, 46; As a theist, belief in personal God, 47; difference between Śaṅkara and Vallabha, 47
- Sāṅkhya — a system of philosophy attributed to Kapila
- Śārīraka bhāṣya* — bhāṣya on BrSū
- Sarkar, Sir Jadunath — a historian, 2
- Śāhī — Hindu dynasty of Kabul, 2
- Skanda* — name of a Mahāpurāṇa. In seven volumes (khaṇḍas), it describes the holiness of rivers and places like Kāśī, Prabhāsa, Badnagar, the Revā and a number of other holy places
- Śrībhāṣya* — Rāmānuja's
commentary of BrSū

Śrīkaṇṭha — author of Brahma-mīmāṃsā bhāṣya — exponent of Śaiva Viśiṣṭādvaita, 51-52

Śrīpati Pandit — author of Śrīkara Bhāṣya on BrSū — exponent of Śakti-viśiṣṭādvaita, 52-53

Sūfis — A Muslim sect, 3

Supārśva — Purāṇic name for modern Kirgiziya, 1

Suryanarayana Sastri, S.S. — author of Śivādvaita of Śrīkaṇṭha, 18

svatantra — Possessing absolute Free Will, capable of creating or destroying the world without any external help or upādāna

Śveta — A Purāṇic mountain now identified with Nura — Turkistan Akshai range, 1

Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad, 75, 79

Taittirīya Upaniṣad, 76

Tattvārtha-dīpa-nibandha — first work of Vallabha, 7, 58, 59, 63, 67, 68, 73, 76, 78

Tīrtha — a holy place — a river, mountain, village, city, etc.

Uttarakuru — A Purāṇic country now identified with Western Siberia

Vallabhācārya — Exponent of Śuddhādvaita school of philosophy — family history, 5; early life, 6-7; Dharmasabhā at Jagannātha Purī and formulation of articles of Faith in Kṛṣṇa, 7; second pilgrimage and formulation of Brahma Vāda, 8-9; settles at Adail, writes commentaries on Bhāgavata (Subodhinī) and on BrSū (Aṇu Bhāṣya), 9; Jala-samādhi, 10; regarded Śiva and Viṣṇu epithets of the Brahman, 10, similarity with Kāśmīr Śaivism, 17; follows Āśmarathya in interpreting Vaiśvānara, 27; Brahmā, samavāyī kāraṇa, 28; finds no contradiction in Auḍulomi and Jaimini, 30; promise to Puṣṭi bhaktas, a special body on release, 33; views on the Brahman, 60; nomāyā theory, 47; influence of Madhva, 51; difference with Śaṅkara's Advaita — views about pramāṇas — samādhi bhāṣā of Bhāgavata, 58-59; Prameya — Brahman, Kṛṣṇa, 59-60; Vallabha's concept of Brahmā and Parama Śiva of Kāśmīr Śaivas, 60; emphasis of one-ness of jada, jīva and antrayāmin, 61; doctrine of reconciliation between

- contradictory qualities, 61;
Brahman, the cause of the world is real so the world is real, 61; difference from Rāmānuja in the elevation of acit (jaḍa), 61; difference with Madhva on concept of the deity and world creation, 62; God impartial but special favour to Puṣṭi bhakts — Vallabha's liberal avatāra-vāda, Kṛṣṇa, 63; Vallabha's special contribution, 63; Akṣara Brahman, 67-71; Vallabha's concept of individual soul, 73-81; Brahmā, material cause of the world, so knower of Brahman knows everything, 87; emphasis on bhakti and God's grace — influence on fine Arts — path free for all — 94
- Varāhamihira — an ancient astronomer — author of Bṛhat-saṁhitā, 1
- Vasugupta — exponent of Īśvarādvayavāda of Kāśmīr Śaivism, viruddha-dharmā-sṛaya — quality of reconciling and accommodating contradictory qualities — characteristic of Brahmā or Kṛṣṇa and Parama Śiva of Kāśmīr Śaivism, 60
- Vijñān-Jiva*, 76, 77 But idea or ideation in Buddhist Vijñāna Vāda, 85, 86
- Viṣṇusvāmī, 56
- Verses attributed to Viṣṇusvāmin, 99-102
- Viṭṭhalanātha — author of Vidvan-maṇḍana, 62-63
- vikāra* — change, 88